LINGUISTIC SURVEY OF INDIA.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION ADOPTED.

A.—For the Dēva-nāgarī alphabet, and others related to it—

अ a, आ ā, इ i, ई ī, उ u, ऊ ū, ऋ ṛi, ए e, ऐ ai, ओ o, औ ō, औ au.

क ka	ख kha	ग ga	घ gha	ङ ṅa	च cha	छ chha	ज ja	झ jha	ञ ña
ट ṭa	ठ ṭha	ड ḍa	ढ ḍha	ण ṇa	त ta	थ tha	द da	ध dha	न na
प pa	फ pha	ब ba	भ bha	म ma	य ya	र ra	ल la	व va or wa

Visarga (:) is represented by h, thus क्रमशः kramaśah. Anuswāra (') is represented by m, thus सिंह simh, वंश vaṁś. In Bengali and some other languages it is pronounced ng, and is then written ng; thus बंग bangśa. Anunāsika or Chandra-bindu is represented by the sign ~ over the letter nasalized, thus मेँ mě.

B.—For the Arabic alphabet, as adapted to Hindōstānī—

ا a , etc.	ج j	د d	ر r	س s	ع ' '
ب b	ڄ ch	ڌ ḍ	ڙ ṛ	ش sh	غ gh
پ p	ح h	ذ z	ز z	ص s	ف f
ت t	خ kh		ژ zh	ض z	ق q
ث t				ط t	ک k
ث s				ظ z	گ g
					ل l
					م m
					ن n
					و when representing anunāsika in Dēva-nāgarī, by ~ over nasalized vowel.
					و or v
					ه h
					ی y , etc.

Tanwin is represented by n, thus فُرّان fauran. Alif-i maqṣūra is represented by ā;— thus, دَعْرِي da'wā.

In the Arabic character, a final silent h is not transliterated,—thus بَندہ banda. When pronounced, it is written,—thus, گُنّہ gunāh.

Vowels when not pronounced at the end of a word, are not written in transliteration. Thus, बन ban, not bana. When not pronounced in the middle of a word or only slightly pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word, they are written in small characters above the line. Thus (Hindī) देखता dēkh'tā, pronounced dēkhtā; (Kāś-mīrī) चहूँ chāh; कर्क kar, pronounced kor; (Bihārī) देखथि dēkhatḥ.

C.—Special letters peculiar to special languages will be dealt with under the head of the languages concerned. In the meantime the following more important instances may be noted :—

(a) The ts sound found in Marāṭhī (च), Puṣhṭō (چ), Kāśmīrī (چ, च), Tibetan (ཅ), and elsewhere, is represented by ts. So, the aspirate of that sound is represented by tsʰ.

(b) The dz sound found in Marāṭhī (ज), Puṣhṭō (ج), and Tibetan (ཇ) is represented by dz, and its aspirate by dzʰ.

(c) Kāśmīrī (چ) is represented by ñ.

(d) Sindhī (ڄ), Western Panjābī (and elsewhere on the N.-W. Frontier) (ڄ), and Puṣhṭō (ج or چ) are represented by n.

(e) The following are letters peculiar to Puṣhṭō :—

ت t ; چ ts or dz, according to pronunciation ; د d ; ر r ; ز zh or g, according to pronunciation ; س sh or kh, according to pronunciation ; ن n or چ n.

(f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhī :—

ب bb ; پ bh ; ت th ; ٺ t ; ٺ th ; ڀ ph ; ڄ jj ; ڄ jh ; ڄ chh ;
ڄ ñ ; ڄ dh ; ڄ d ; ڄ dd ; ڄ dh ; ڪ k ; ڪ kh ; ڳ gg ; ڳ gh ;
ڳ n ; ڳ n.

D.—Certain sounds, which are not provided for above, occur in transcribing languages which have no alphabet, or in writing phonetically (as distinct from transliterating) languages (such as Bengali) whose spelling does not represent the spoken sounds. The principal of these are the following :—

ā, represents the sound of the a in all.

e, „ „ „ é in the French était.

o, „ „ „ o in the first o in promote.

ö, „ „ „ ö in the German schön.

th, „ „ „ th in think.

dh, „ „ „ th in this.

The semi-consonants peculiar to the Muṇḍā languages are indicated by an apostrophe. Thus k', t', p', and so on.

E.—When it is necessary to mark an accented syllable, the acute accent is used. Thus in (Khōwār) ássistai, he was, the acute accent shows that the accent falls on the first, and not, as might be expected, on the second syllable.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

I AM indebted to Dr. Sten Konow of Christiania, Norway, for the preparation of this volume. As Editor of the Series of volumes of the Linguistic Survey of India, I am responsible for all statements contained in it.

GEORGE A. GRIERSON.

MARĀṬHĪ.

Like the Mediate Group of Indo-Aryan vernaculars, the southern one is a group of dialects, and not of languages. It includes only one language, viz., Marāṭhī.

The Southern Group.

Marāṭhī with its sub-dialects occupies parts of three provinces, viz., the Bombay Presidency, Berar, and the Central Provinces, with numerous settlers in Central India and the Madras Presidency. It is the principal language of the north-western part of His Highness the Nizam's dominions and of Portuguese India. The area in which it is spoken is, roughly speaking, 100,000 square miles.

Area in which spoken.

On the west, Marāṭhī is bounded by the Arabian Sea, from Daman in the north to Karwar in the south. The northern frontier follows the Daman-Ganga towards the east and crosses Nasik, leaving the northern part of the district to Khāndēśī. It thence runs along the southern and eastern frontier of Khandesh, through the southern part of Nimar, Betul, Chhindwara, and Seoni, where the Satpura range forms the northern boundary. The frontier line thence turns to the south-east, including the southern part of Balaghat and almost the whole of Bhandara, with important settlements in Raipur. The Hal^abī dialect occupies the central and eastern part of the Bastar State, still farther to the east.

Political Boundaries.

From the south-eastern corner of Bhandara the line runs south-westwards, including Nagpur and the north-western corner of Chanda, where it turns towards the west through the district of Wun, leaving a narrow strip in the south to Telugu. It then continues towards the south, including the district of Basim, and into the dominions of His Highness the Nizam, where it again turns westwards to Akalkot and Sholapur. The frontier then goes south-westwards, in an irregular line, including Sholapur and Kolhapur, to the Ghats, and thence to the sea at Karwar.

Marāṭhī has to its north, in order from west to east, Gujarātī, Khāndēśī, Rājasthānī, Western Hindī, and Eastern Hindī. To the east we find Eastern Hindī, Gōṇḍī, and Telugu. Hal^abī, which is separated from Marāṭhī by Chhattisgarhī and Dravidian languages, merges into Oṛiyā in the east through the Bhatrī dialect. In the south we find, proceeding from the east, Gōṇḍī, Telugu, and Kanarese.

Linguistic Boundaries.

The dialectic differences within the Marāṭhī area are comparatively small, and there is only one real dialect, viz., Kōṇkaṇī. There are, of course, everywhere local varieties, and these are usually honoured by a separate name. On the whole, however, Marāṭhī is a remarkably uniform language.

Dialects.

Three slightly different forms may conveniently be distinguished, the Marāṭhī of the Dekhan, the Marāṭhī of Berar and the Central Provinces, and the Marāṭhī of the Central and Northern Konkan. The last two forms of the language have some characteristics in common, and these are also shared by the rustic dialects of the Dekhan, such as the form of speech current among the Kuṇ^abīs of Poona.

In the southern part of the district of Ratnagiri the Konkan form of Marāṭhī gradually merges into Kōṇkaṇī, through several minor dialects.

Several broken dialects are spoken in various parts of the Marāṭhī territory, and will be dealt with in connection with the various forms of that language. In the northern part of the coast strip belonging to Marāṭhī we find some smaller dialects, such as Kāthōḍī, Vārli, Vāḍval, Phuḍgī, and Sāmṽedī, which in several points agree with Gujarātī-Bhīli. The Khāndēśī dialect of Khandesh, which has hitherto been classed with Marāṭhī, has in this Survey been transferred to Gujarātī. It contains a large admixture of Marāṭhī, but the inner form of the language differs, and its base is a Prākṛit dialect more closely related to Śaurasēnī than to Mahārāshṭrī which latter Prākṛit is derived from the same base as modern Marāṭhī.

Further towards the east we find some broken dialects, such as Katiyā, Halbī, Bhunjiā, Nāharī, and Kamārī, which have been so largely influenced by Marāṭhī that it has been found convenient to deal with them in this connection, though they are no true Marāṭhī dialects.

Marāṭhī, including its dialects, is the home tongue of several districts which are not included in the present Survey, such as the Portuguese territories and part of His Highness the Nizam's dominions. The numbers of speakers of such districts must be added to the figures returned from the various districts within the scope of this Survey.

Speakers of Marāṭhī in those districts of Central India and the Central Provinces over which the Peshwa and Holkar formerly held sway have been included among the total of those who use the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī as their home language. The details will be found under the different forms of Marāṭhī; the total number of speakers of the various forms of the language within the Marāṭhī territory is as follows:—

Marāṭhī of the Dekhan	6,193,083
Marāṭhī of Berar and the Central Provinces (including the Nizam's dominions) .	7,677,432
Marāṭhī of the Konkan	2,350,817
Kōṅkaṇī (including Portuguese territories and Madras Presidency)	1,559,029
TOTAL	17,780,361

These figures include the speakers of broken dialects in the Konkan and the Central Provinces. The figures for the Nizam's dominions, Portuguese India, and the Madras Presidency have been taken from the reports of the Census of 1891.

Marāṭhī and its dialects is also, to some extent, spoken outside the territory where it is a vernacular. At the Census of 1891 Marāṭhī and Kōṅkaṇī were separately returned. The figures for those districts where Marāṭhī and Kōṅkaṇī were spoken as foreign tongues were as follows:—

Marāṭhī spoken abroad in	Number of speakers.
Ajmere-Merwara	1,604
Andamans	913
Assam	85
Bengal and Feudatories	909
Burmah	565
Coorg	2,621
Madras	123,530
Mysore	65,356
Punjab and Feudatories	551
Quettah	1,340
Rajputana and Central India	11,072
Sind	9,265
United Provinces and Feudatories	7,414
TOTAL	225,225

Kōṅkaṇī has been returned for the purposes of this Survey as spoken by 20 settlers in Chanda. The other figures which follow have been taken from the reports of the Census of 1891 :—

Where spoken.	Number of speakers.
Rajputana	47
Chanda	20
Coorg	2,129

By adding together all these figures we arrive at the following total for Marāṭhī and its dialects :—

Marāṭhī spoken at home—

Dekhan	6,193,083
Berar and Central Provinces	7,677,432
Konkan	2,350,817

* See Kāvya-larṣa i. 35, Mahārāshṭrī-grāyam bhāṣhām prakṛishṭam Prākṛitam viduḥ.

The opinion of the Indian grammarians has not been universally adopted by European scholars, and it will, therefore, be necessary in this place to go into detail in order to explain my reasons for adhering to it.

The arguments generally adduced against the derivation of Marāṭhī and Māhārāshṭrī from the same base are of two kinds. In the first place it is argued that Māhārāshṭrī and Śaurasēnī are simply two varieties of the same dialect; in the second place it is pointed out that Marāṭhī in several respects agrees with eastern vernaculars which must apparently be derived from a Māgadha dialect and not from the old language of the Śaurasēna country. It will be seen that both arguments are in reality one and the same, and that if it could be shown that Māhārāshṭrī was a quite distinct dialect which differed from Śaurasēnī and approached the eastern Prākritis, the analogy which certainly exists between Marāṭhī and eastern vernaculars could no more be adduced against deriving Marāṭhī and Māhārāshṭrī from the same base.

It will, therefore, be necessary to put the supposition of the identity of Māhārāshṭrī and Śaurasēnī to the test.

Our knowledge of the Prākritis is to a great extent based on the Prākrit grammarians who were not content to describe the various vernaculars which furnished the base for the literary Prākritis, but who also tried to systematise them, and often seem to have constructed general rules out of stray occurrences or phonetical tendencies. The literary Prākritis in this way came to differ from the spoken vernaculars. They were not, however, mere fictions, and the more we learn about the linguistic conditions of old India, the more we see that the differences stated to exist between the various Prākrit dialects in most cases correspond to actual differences in the spoken vernaculars.

On the other hand, the description given of the various Prākritis by the grammarians is not complete, and must be supplemented from the Prākrit literature. This literature is considerable and it makes it possible to get a good idea of two dialects, the so-called Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi. Śaurasēnī is less known, though we are able to understand the principal features of that dialect. With regard to Māgadhi we are almost entirely confined to the rules given by the grammarians.

Professor Pischel has, in his masterly Prākrit Grammar, collected the materials from the grammarians and from the literature and rendered it a comparatively easy task to define the relationship between the different Prākritis.

Classification of the Prākritis. Three different classifications seem to be possible, according to the features which we choose as our starting points.

In some features Śaurasēnī agrees with Māgadhi as against Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi. The principal ones are the treatment of single consonants between vowels, and the formation of the passive and of the conjunctive participle.

According to the Prākrit grammarians every Sanskrit unaspirated mute consonant between vowels, if not a cerebral, is dropped in the Prākritis and a faintly sounded y, or, in the case of p or b, a v, is substituted for it. This y is not, however, written in other than Jaina manuscripts. It seems certain that this rule of the grammarians was a generalisation of a phonetical tendency and did not exactly correspond to the actual facts of the genuine vernaculars. The tendency to drop consonants in such positions must, however, have been strong, as we find its results largely prevalent in modern vernaculars. Compare Marāṭhī kumbhār, Sanskrit kumbha-(k)āra, a potter; Marāṭhī talē, Sanskrit ta-dā(g)a, a tank; Marāṭhī sūy, Sanskrit sū(ch)ī, a needle; Marāṭhī nēṇ^aṇō, Sanskrit na-(j)ānāmi, I don't know; Marāṭhī bī, Sanskrit bī(j)a, a seed; Marāṭhī śam(bhar), Sanskrit śa(t)a, hundred; Marāṭhī pāy, Sanskrit pā(d)a, a foot, and so on.

The Prākṛit grammarians make one important exception from the rule. A t between vowels becomes d in Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi, but is dropped in other dialects. Thus, Sanskrit gata, Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi gada, Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi gaa, gaya, gone. A t between vowels is very common, and, especially, it occurs in numerous verbal forms. The result is that its different treatment gives a very marked character to the two groups. There cannot, however, be any doubt that this difference is one of time and not of dialect. The d is the intermediary stage between t and the dropping of the sound, and there can be no doubt that a d was really often pronounced in the vernaculars on which Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi were based. For not only does the oldest Prākṛit grammarian Vararuehi (ii, 7) allow the change of t to d in Māhārāshṭrī in certain words, but the manuscripts freely write d in Māhārāshṭrī, a confusion which it would be difficult to explain if the distinction made by the grammarians corresponded to the actual facts in the spoken vernaculars. This point cannot, therefore, be made the basis of a classification.

The passive is formed by adding the suffix īa in Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi, but ijja in the other dialects. Thus, Sanskrit krīyatē, Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi kariādi, Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi karijjaī, it is done. This distinction between the two groups has been inferred from the practice of the best manuscripts. There are, however, numerous exceptions, and forms ending in īyyadi, which is a variant of ījjadi, seem to occur in Māgadhi verses. This point cannot therefore be urged.

There remains the formation of the conjunctive participle which usually ends in īa in Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi and in ūṇa in Māhārāshṭrī and often also in Ardhamāgadhi. This latter dialect has, however, several other forms. Thus, Māhārāshṭrī hasiūṇa, Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi hasia, having laughed. The subsequent linguistic history of India shows that we are here face to face with a real distinction between the north and the south. The u-form has survived in Marāṭhī, in some Rājasthānī dialects, and in Oṛiyā, while other languages use forms derived from the old participles ending in īa.

A division of the Prākṛits on account of this distinction cannot, however, seriously be maintained, and Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi differ in so many points that it is out of question to bring them into close connection with each other.

Dr. Hoernle, in his Comparative Grammar of the Gaudian Languages divided the Prākṛit dialects into a western group, viz., Śaurasēnī-Māhārāshṭrī, and an eastern, viz., Māgadhi. These two groups differ in pronunciation and in the formation of the nominative singular of masculine a-bases. The western group changes every s-sound to a dental s, the eastern to a palatal ś; the western substitutes j for every initial j and y, the eastern prefers y; the western possesses both r and l, the eastern only l; the nominative singular of masculine a-bases ends in ō in the west and in ē in the east. Ardhamāgadhi agrees with the west in all points excepting the last one, the nominative singular of masculine a-bases usually ending in ē, but also, in old texts in ō.

This last test point, the termination of the nominative, must probably be eliminated from the features which distinguish the east from the west, for the most eastern Prākṛit dialect of which we have any knowledge, the so-called Dhakkī, which must have been based on the dialect spoken in Dacca, forms the nominative in ō; thus, pulisō, a man. This dialect also differs from Māgadhi in the treatment of s-sounds. It possesses a dental s, corresponding to s and śh in Sanskrit, and a palatal ś, corresponding to Sanskrit ś; thus, daśa, ten; pulisassa, Sanskrit purushasya, of the man. Dhakkī also seems to use j like the western Prākritis. Thus, jampidum, Māgadhi yampidum, Sanskrit jalpitum, to talk.

There thus only remains one of the test points in which the east differs from the west, the use of l and r respectively. I do not think that this point is of sufficient importance to base a classification on it.

The division of the Prākritis into a western and an eastern group is based on the supposition that Śaurasēnī and Māhārāṣṭrī are essentially the same dialect. Since this theory was first put forward our knowledge of the Prākritis has advanced very far, and we now know that the two are radically different. They differ in phonology, in the formation of many verbal bases and of many tenses, in vocabulary, and in their general character. Śaurasēnī has, on the whole, the same vocabulary as classical Sanskrit, while Māhārāṣṭrī is full of provincial words; the inflexional system of Śaurasēnī has nothing of the rich variety of forms which characterizes Māhārāṣṭrī. If we add the points of disagreement adduced above, the wide divergence between the two dialects cannot be doubted. The relation between them can be compared to that existing between classical Sanskrit and the Vedic dialects, on the one side the correct and fixed speech of the śiṣṭas, or educated classes, on the other the ever fluctuating, richly varied language of the masses.

In these characteristics Māhārāṣṭrī agrees with Ardhamāgadhi. The close connection between those two Prākritis is so apparent that it has always been recognised. Several scholars have even gone so far as to identify them. Nobody would do so at the present day. There can, however, be no doubt with regard to the close relationship between them, and they may safely be classed together as forming one group as against Śaurasēnī.

Ardhamāgadhi is the link which connects Māhārāṣṭrī with Māgadhi. This latter Prākrit is very unsatisfactorily known. It seems to comprise several dialects, but we are not, as yet, able to get a clear idea of them. In phonetics they seem to have struck out independent lines of their own. There are, however, sufficient indications to show that they had more points of analogy with Māhārāṣṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi than would appear at the first glance. I pass by some points of phonology, and shall only draw attention to a few facts which seem to show that Māgadhi is based on a dialect, or on dialects, which had an inflexional system characterized with the same rich variety of forms as in Māhārāṣṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi.

Māgadhi has preserved traces of the old dative of a-themes, which has been throughout replaced by the genitive in Śaurasēnī. Thus, vināśāa, Sanskrit vināśāya, in order to destroy. Such forms are, however, perhaps only correct in verses. There are two forms of the genitive singular and three forms of the locative singular of a-bases; thus, puttāśśa and puttāha, Sanskrit putrasya, Śaurasēnī only puttassa, of the son; muhē, Sanskrit mukhē, in the mouth; kūcammi, Sanskrit kūpē, in the well; kulāhim, Sanskrit kulē, in the family. Śaurasēnī has only forms such as kulē.

The Ātmanēpada form of verbs, which in Śaurasēnī is confined to the first person singular, is used more freely in Māgadhi; optatives such as kareyyā, I may do, occur in Māgadhi as well as the Śaurasēnī forms karēam or karē; imperatives such as pivāhi, drink, are used in addition to piva, Sanskrit piba, but not so in Śaurasēnī.

A suffix corresponding to the illa, which plays a great rôle in Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi, but not in Śaurasēnī, must have been common in Māgadhi, as the modern vernaculars clearly show. Compare also Māgadhi gāmēlua, Sanskrit grāmya, boorish.

Such instances might be multiplied if we could draw the Māgadhi of the inscriptions and Pāli into the scope of our inquiry. The preceding indications are, however, sufficient to show that the general character of the Māgadhi dialects was more closely related to that of Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi than that of Śaurasēnī. We seem therefore to be justified in dividing the Prākritis into one inner group, viz., Śaurasēnī, and one outer comprising Māhārāshṭrī, Ardhamāgadhi, and Māgadhi. This latter group shows great variety in its dialects, but has throughout the same character of inflexional richness.

There cannot, then, any more be any objection to the derivation of Māhārāshṭrī and Marāṭhī from the same base, and we must return to the Indian tradition and to the conclusion that Māhārāshṭrī and Marāṭhī are based on the same form of speech just as the two names, Māhārāshṭrī and Marāṭhī, are two different forms of one and the same word.

It is now permissible to draw attention to several points in which Marāṭhī agrees with Māhārāshṭrī. When similar forms also occur in other modern vernaculars, especially in the east, this fact is only in accord with the remarks above. Even Western Hindī forms can often be adduced which agree with Marāṭhī and Māhārāshṭrī as against Śaurasēnī. This is partly to be explained by assuming that Western Hindī is derived from various sources. Though it is, in its general character, a Śaurasēna dialect, it has also assimilated elements from other, say outer, forms of speech. Māhārāshṭrī was, moreover, once the dialect of lyric poetry all over India, and it must necessarily have exercised an influence on other dialects, such as that spoken in the home of the present Western Hindī.

Māhārāshṭrī has been preserved in two slightly varying forms, the chief language of Prākrit literature, and the dialect of the non-canonical literature of the Śvētāmbara Jains. This latter form of the language is usually called Jaina Māhārāshṭrī, and was perhaps based on the vernacular spoken in Surāshṭra, the modern peninsula of Kathiawar, before the present settlers entered it. The difference between the two forms of Māhārāshṭrī is, however, of comparatively small importance and need not trouble us in this connection.

In comparing Marāṭhī with Māhārāshṭrī, we cannot base our inquiry on the vocabulary. In the first place we know too little of Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi, and in the second place, the vocabulary of modern Aryan vernaculars does not differ to any considerable extent. A comparison of the inflexions will also yield but a small result, the modern system being quite different from that prevailing in the old Prākritis. It will hence be necessary to base our conclusions on those facts in which the old Prākritis are known to differ from each other, and where the same difference can be traced down to modern times. We shall begin with some phonetical features.

Long vowels are occasionally shortened in Māhārāshṭrī. Thus, in the common word kumarō, Sanskrit and Śaurasēnī kumārō, a boy. Compare Marāṭhī kumar, which is not a poetical form. Other dialects have kūwar and kūwār.

Haridrā, turmeric, often becomes haliddī or haladdī in Māhārāshṭrī. Compare Marāṭhī halad, dative hal^adī-lā, rural Hindī halad, haldī, hardī.

The Sanskrit vowel ṛi is sometimes differently treated in the old dialects. Thus, Sanskrit krīta, Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi kaa (compare Māgadhi, Ardhamāgadhi kaḍa), but Śaurasēnī usually kida, done; Sanskrit ghṛita, Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi ghaa, but Śaurasēnī and Māgadhi ghida, clarified butter. Similarly we find Marāṭhī kēlē, i.e., kaya-illam, done, while ghī, clarified butter, according to Molesworth is scarcely used in Marāṭhī and must be considered as a Hindi loan-word.

Soft consonants are occasionally hardened in the Prākṛits. Thus, Māhārāshṭrī Consonants. machchāi and majjāi, Sanskrit mādyati, he grows mad; Māhārāshṭrī vachchāi for vajjāi, Sanskrit vrajati, he goes.

Compare Marāṭhī mats^anē (Hindi mach^anā), to swell; Kōṅkaṇī votsū, to go.

The aspiration has been transferred in the Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi ghettum, Sanskrit grahitum, to take. Śaurasēnī has geṇhidum. The base occurring in the Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi forms has only survived in Marāṭhī. Compare ghēt^alē, taken.

Dental consonants are much more commonly cerebralised in Māhārāshṭrī, Ardhamāgadhi, and also in Māgadhi, than in Śaurasēnī. Compare Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi ḍasaī, Sanskrit daśatī, he bites; ḍahai, Sanskrit dahati, he burns; ḍōla, an eye (compare Sanskrit dōla, oscillating); ḍollai, Sanskrit dōlāyatē, he swings; ḍōhalaa, Sanskrit dōhalaka, the longings of a pregnant woman. Similarly we find Marāṭhī ḍas^anē, to bite; ḍāhō (poetical), heat; ḍāḍ^anē, to be hot; ḍōlā, an eye; ḍōh^alā, longings of a pregnant woman, etc. Similar forms occur also in other dialects.

We may add stray forms such as Sanskrit kshētra, Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi chhetta, Marāṭhī śēt, but Śaurasēnī khetta, Hindi khēt, a field; Māhārāshṭrī kira, Marāṭhī kīr, but Śaurasēnī and Sanskrit kila, forsooth; Sanskrit gardabha, Māhārāshṭrī gaḍḍaha, Marāṭhī gāḍhav, but Śaurasēnī guddaha, Hindi gadhā, an ass; Sanskrit pañchāśat, Māhārāshṭrī pañṇāsam, Marāṭhī pañṇās, while other modern vernaculars have forms such as Western Hindi pachās.

The termination of the nominative singular of masculine a-bases was ō in Māhārāshṭrī and Śaurasēnī. The same is the case in old Marāṭhī, thus,

Nouns and Pronouns. rārō, a king; nandanu, a son. The final u in the latter form is directly derived from an older ō.

The genitive of i-bases, with which old in-bases were confounded, ends in issa and inō in Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi, but only in inō in Śaurasēnī; thus, aggissa and aggiṇō, Sanskrit agnēh, of the fire; hatthissa and hatthinō, Sanskrit hastinaḥ, of an elephant. The form hatthissa directly corresponds to Marāṭhī hāthīs.

With regard to pronouns we may note that the typical Māhārāshṭrī forms mājja, my; tujja, thy, have survived in Marāṭhī māḍ^ahā, my; tud^ahā, thy.

Verbs. The Marāṭhī verb shows something of the same rich variety as the Māhārāshṭrī one.

Thus we not only find the old present, future, and imperative, but also some traces of the precative.

Compare—

dēkhē	indriyā	ādhīna	hōijē,	taī	śītōshpā-tē
see	of-senses	dependent	he-may-become,	then	cold-and-heat
pāvijē	āṇi	sukhaduḥkhī	ākaliē	āpaṇa-pē;
he-will-get	and	with-pleasure-and-sorrow	he-will-bind	himself;

‘See, if a man is dependent on his senses, then he will feel cold and heat and become subject to the feeling of pleasure and sorrow’ (Dnyānēśvarī, ii, 119). Such forms have usually been explained as passives, by assuming that the old passive can also be used as an active. The explanation given above seems, however, in some cases preferable.

The old passive survives in forms such as lābh^añē, to be got; dis^añē, to appear, and so on. In old poetry, however, a passive formed with the characteristic j is in common use; thus, vadhijati, they are killed; kijē, it is done. Such forms have been confounded with the remains of the old precativē, and both were probably felt to be identical. In modern Marāṭhī only the forms mhañ^ajē, it is said, namely; and pāhijē, it is wanted, have survived.

It is of importance to note that such forms correspond to the Māhārāshṭrī passive ending in ijjā, while Śaurasēnī has iadi.

Marāṭhī infinitives such as mārū, to strike, are directly derived from Māhārāshṭrī forms such as mārium, to strike. The participle of necessity, which ends in arva in Māhārāshṭrī, tavya in Sanskrit, has survived in most modern dialects, sometimes as a future or an infinitive, as in eastern dialects, sometimes as a present participle passive as in Sindhi. Marāṭhī, as well as Gujarātī, uses forms derived from this participle as infinitives, but has also retained it in its original meaning of a future participle passive. Thus, Marāṭhī myā karāvē, Māhārāshṭrī maē kariavvaṃ, it should be done by me, I should do.

The Marāṭhī conjunctive participle in ūn, old Marāṭhī ū and u-niā, i.e. ū + niā, is derived from the corresponding Māhārāshṭrī form ending in ūṇa and um, and has nothing to do with the Śaurasēnī form which adds ia. Thus, Sanskrit kṛtvā, Māhārāshṭrī kariūṇa, karium, Marāṭhī karū, karuniā, karūn, but Śaurasēnī karia and kadua.

We may add the frequency with which the suffix illa is used in Māhārāshṭrī and probably all eastern Prākṛits, just as its modern representative l in Marāṭhī, and, lastly, the use of the emphatic particle Māhārāshṭrī and Ardhamāgadhi chēa, chia, chcha, Marāṭhī chi, ts, Chhattisgarhi ēch, but Śaurasēnī jēva, Gujarātī and Rājasthānī j.

Such points of agreement cannot fail to add strength to the conclusion that Māhārāshṭrī Prākṛit was based on the vernacular of the Marāṭhā country, which is the direct source from which modern Marāṭhī is derived.

Marāṭhī is the only modern vernacular which has been derived from the old Māhā-

Place of Marāṭhī in reference to other Indo-Aryan vernaculars. rāshṭra Apabhraṃśa. That latter form of speech had a distinct character of its own. Though being of the same general kind as the eastern vernaculars, it differed from them in several points and sometimes agreed with Śaurasēnī, especially in the pronunciation of certain sounds. The modern representative of the old Māhārāshṭra Apabhraṃśa is Marāṭhī, and it is, therefore, to be expected that that form of speech occupies a somewhat independent position, sometimes agreeing with the languages of the outer, and sometimes with those of the inner group. That is also the case. Moreover, the conservative character of Marāṭhī has tended to make this independence greater than it was, and at the present day Marāṭhī is a language with very well marked frontiers, and does not merge into any of the neighbouring forms of speech. The border line between Marāṭhī on one side and Gujarātī, Rājasthānī and Western Hindī on the other, is very sharply marked. In the west we see that Gujarātī Bhili and Khāndēśī gradually become more and more influenced by Marāṭhī. But even when such dialects assume the linguistic form of Marāṭhī, as in the case of Vād^aval, Vārli, etc., they retain the character of mixed forms of speech and are no real connecting links. Similar is the state of affairs in the east. The Hal^abī dialect is not a connecting link between Marāṭhī, Chhattisgarhi and Oṛiyā, but a mechanical mixture of all these three languages, spoken by a tribe whose language did not originally belong to the Indo-Aryan Family.

Relation of Marāṭhī to the Inner Group.

It has already been stated that Marāṭhī in some points agrees with the languages of the inner group. The principal ones are as follows :—

The pronunciation generally. In Kōṅkaṇī, however, we find some features which agree with the state of affairs in the east. Thus Kōṅkaṇī possesses the short e and o sounds and pronounces the short a like the o in 'hot.'

Marāṭhī has two s-sounds, a dental s and a palatal ś. This latter sound is used before y and before i, ī, and ē, which vowels are usually pronounced almost as yī, yī, yē, respectively, a state of affairs which is not in accord with the principles prevailing in the east. The palatal pronunciation of s is, therefore, due to the combination of s and y, and quite different from the Bengali ś, which has another origin as the eastern Prākṛits clearly show. Some Marāṭhī dialects only know the dental s.

The pronunciation of the palatals as ts, dz, respectively, also occurs in some eastern dialects, and in Kāśmīrī. A similar pronunciation is common in several dialects of Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. Exact parallels to the Marāṭhī pronunciation of s and of the palatals are only found in Telugu. Such points do not, therefore, prove a closer connexion between the pronunciation of Marāṭhī and of eastern vernaculars.

On the other hand, v and b are distinguished as in Gujarātī, Pañjābī, Sindhi, and, partly, in Rājasthānī. Marāṭhī has a cerebral ḷ like Rājasthānī, Gujarātī, Pañjābī, and also Oṛiyā.

With regard to the inflexion of nouns and verbs, it should be noted that Marāṭhī has three genders like Gujarātī and some rural dialects of Western Hindī.

The nominative singular of strong masculine bases ends in ā as in the east and in some dialects of Western Hindī, but in ō in Kōṅkaṇī. The nominative plural ends in ē as in Western Hindī.

Marāṭhī possesses a separate case of the agent and, in consequence thereof, uses the passive construction of the past tense of transitive verbs. The verb is put in the neuter singular if the object is accompanied by a case suffix. In the Konkan, however, it agrees with the object also in such cases, just as it does in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. Kōṅkaṇī also agrees with Gujarātī in possessing a separate form of the nominative singular of the personal pronoun of the first person; thus Kōṅkaṇī hāṇv, Gujarātī hāṇ, I.

The nominative singular masculine of demonstrative and relative pronouns ends in ō as in Western Hindī, like the nominative of masculine a-bases in Māhārāshṭrī.

Marāṭhī uses an n-suffix to form a verbal noun, as does also Western Hindī. The same suffix, however, also occurs in Eastern Hindī, and Marāṭhī has also a v infinitive like Gujarātī and eastern vernaculars.

None of these points are of sufficient importance to prove a closer connexion between Marāṭhī and the languages of the inner group. They are partly due to the conservative nature of the language, as in the case of the preservation of a separate case of the agent, and they are partly of the same nature as those features in which Māhārāshṭrī agreed with Śaurasēnī.

In other points Marāṭhī agrees with the languages of the outer circle. The points of analogy in pronunciation have already been noted, and it has been stated that they are of relatively small importance.

Relation of Marāṭhī to the Outer Circle.

On the other hand, the preceding pages dealing with the relationship between Marāṭhī and Māhārāshṭrī will have revealed many facts which show that the phonetical laws of Marāṭhī often closely agree with those prevailing in the east. Of greater importance, however, are several points of analogy in inflexion.

All weak a-bases in Marāṭhī have an oblique form ending in ā; thus, bāp, a father, dative bāpā-lā. The same form also occurs in the east. Thus, Bihārī pahar, a guard, oblique pahārā. The eastern vernaculars do not, it is true, use this form regularly. Its existence is, however, of sufficient importance to be adduced in this place. Marāṭhī also shows the origin of this form. In addition to the oblique base ending in ā, it also, dialectically, uses a form ending in ās; thus, in the Konkan, bāpās-na, by the father. Bāpās directly corresponds to the Māhārāshṭrī form bappassa, of a father, and it is evident that bāpā has the same origin, the change of ss to h being already found in Māhārāshṭrī.

The termination of the second person singular of verbal tenses ends in s as in Bengali, Bihārī, and Eastern Hindī. Kōnkanī, however, uses y like Kāśmīrī, and in Berar and the Central Provinces the second person is usually formed like the third person without an s.

The past tense has different forms for the three persons, as in eastern dialects. The personal suffixes are the same as in the case of the old present, and it is, therefore, doubtful whether Marāṭhī possesses the so-called pronominal suffixes which play so great a rôle in many outer languages. The s which is, in some dialects, added to the second person singular of all verbs, may perhaps be such a suffix. In a similar way we sometimes find a t added to the second person plural, and an n to the third person singular. Compare forms such as karilēs, it was done (by thee); sāṅgilālān (Konkan and Berar), it was said (by him). Such forms are, however, only occasionally used, and the whole question about pronominal suffixes must be left open so far as Marāṭhī is concerned.

The past tense is formed by adding an l-suffix as in the east. This feature pervades the whole conjugational system and gives a peculiar colour to the language which is entirely wanting in the inner group. Gujarātī, it is true, forms a pluperfect participle by adding an l-suffix. This seems, however, to be one of those points in which that language has been influenced by the vernaculars formerly spoken in its present home. The l-suffix must be derived from the Prākṛit suffix illa which played a great rôle in Māhārāshṭrī, Ardhamāgadhī, and probably also in Māgadhī. It is a secondary suffix, added to the old past participle passive, and it is, consequently, originally not necessary. We also find that it is occasionally dropped, not only in the east, but also in Marāṭhī dialects; thus, Chitpāvanī māyārā and mārilā, it was struck. On the other hand, this suffix is used in a much wider way in Kōnkanī. The oldest instance of its use in the modern way is the Ardhamāgadhī āṇilliya, brought.

The future is formed by adding an l- or n-suffix. This form has been compared with the l-present in Bihārī. An l-future also occurs in Rājasthānī and some northern dialects. The base of the Marāṭhī future is identical with the habitual past, the old present. Sometimes, however, the two differ; thus Nāgpurī nīdō, I used to sleep, but nīdāl, I shall sleep; Karhādī mārāsī, thou wilt strike (the corresponding form of the habitual past does not occur in the materials available). It is, therefore, perhaps allowable to conclude that the Marāṭhī future (and past habitual) has preserved traces of two old forms, the present and future. Māhārāshṭrī future forms such as karihisi, thou wilt do; karihii, he will do, would regularly become karīs and karī in Marāṭhī.

The most important points in which Marāṭhī agrees with eastern vernaculars are thus the oblique form of weak a-bases, the termination of the second person singular of verbal tenses, the distinguishing of the various persons in the past tense, and the l-suffix of the same form. These points are of sufficient importance to justify us in stating a closer relationship between Marāṭhī and the languages of the east. It should, however, be borne in mind that all these characteristics can be explained from the features of Māhārāshṭrī Prākṛit.

In many points Marāṭhī differs from all other Indo-Aryan vernaculars. We may mention the almost universal use by nouns of a distinct oblique base; the dative in s; the genitive suffix tsā; the possessive pronouns māḍḥā, my; tuḍḥā, thy; the numeral pannās, fifty; the conjunctive participle ending in ūn (compare, however, Oṛiyā), and so on.

The position of Marāṭhī as compared with other Indo-Aryan vernaculars may, therefore, be defined as follows. In some points it has developed peculiar forms of its own; in others it agrees with the languages of the inner group, more especially, in pronunciation; and in important points of inflexion it forms one group with the eastern vernaculars of the outer circle.

In the Konkan there are important points of agreement with Gujarātī, a fact which may perhaps be accounted for by the supposition that the Marāṭhī-speaking inhabitants of the Konkan once occupied the modern Gujarat, and only settled in the Konkan after having lived for some time in the neighbourhood of the Gujarātis. The tradition according to which their original home was Trihōtra may be a faint recollection of such a migration.

The Marāṭhā country has long been famous for its literature. The Vaidarbhī Rīti, the literary style of the Berar school of Sanskrit writers, was highly praised by Daṇḍin, as far superior to the artificial style of the east, the Gaudiyā Rīti. The old Māhārāshṭrī lyrics fully justify this praise, and later poets such as Rājasēkhara proudly mention Māhārāshṭra as Sarasvatī-janma-bhūḥ, the birth-place of the goddess of eloquence, where the sweet and serene, the graceful and agreeable, nectar of poetry is found. We cannot in this place give even a rapid survey of the Prākṛit and Sanskrit literature connected with Māhārāshṭra. We must be content to give a short account of the later literature in Marāṭhī.

The revival of literature in the Marāṭhā country is, just as is the case elsewhere in India, closely connected with the religious renaissance which can be traced from the time of Śāṅkara down to the present day. The oldest Marāṭhī literature is, therefore, religious. It is due to the wish to make the religious thoughts and ideas of the old Sanskrit literature accessible to those who were not masters of any language other than their own vernacular. Sanskrit works were, therefore, translated and free paraphrases were made. The bulk of Marāṭhī literature is of this description, and like its prototype, it is written in verse. Prose compositions are later, and have not played the same rôle.

For the history of Marāṭhī literature and the development of the Marāṭhī language it is of importance to note that almost all its poets have come from the Dekhan and the country round Paithan. The Konkan and Berar do not claim a single name of importance.

The beginning of Marāṭhī literature seems to be connected with the Vishnuite reformation inaugurated by Rāmānuja (beginning of the twelfth century). To him Vishṇu was the 'Supreme Deity, endowed with every possible gracious attribute, full of love and pity for the sinful beings who adore him, and granting the released soul after death a home of eternal bliss near him.'

The same religious devotion to Vishṇu, or, as he calls him Viṭhōbā, meets us in the *Abhaṅgs*¹ of Nāmdēv, who is considered to be the first Marāṭhī poet. He was a tailor from Pandharpur, and probably flourished in the middle of the thirteenth century. Most of his works have been lost, but some of his stanzas have found their way into the Adigranth of the Sikhs, and they can still impress us with his devotion to God, for whom he longs 'as the Chakravāka longs for his mate or a child for its mother.'

A contemporary of Nāmdēv was Dnyānōbā, or Dnyānēśvar who wrote a paraphrase of the Bhagavadgītā in the Ōvī metre. He lived at Alandi, north of Poona, and his work, the Dnyānēśvarī or Bhāvārthadīpikā, is dated Śaka 1212 = 1280 A.D. This work is very highly esteemed among the Marāṭhās. It is penetrated by deep religious feeling, but is also pervaded with the barren philosophy of later Hinduism.

The poet Mukundarāya probably belongs to the same age. His best known work is the Vivēka-Sindhu, or Ocean of Discrimination, which is strongly influenced by orthodox Vedantism.

The next important poet whose works have been preserved is Ēkanāth, a Rīgvēdin from Paithan, who died in 1609. His favourite metre was the Ōvī, but he also wrote Abhaṅgs. His principal works are based on Sanskrit originals and are devoted to the praise of Vishṇu. His Ēkanāthī Bhāgavata is based on the 11th Skanda of the Bhāgavata-Purāṇa, and has been printed in Bombay. He further wrote the Bhāvārtha-Rāmāyaṇa, the Rukmiṇī-Svayamvara, the Svātmasukha, etc., and also composed works in Hindōstānī. He was a contemporary of Shāhji, the father of Śivaji, and is spoken of as an ardent student of the Dnyānēśvarī.

His daughter's son was Muktēśvar, who was born in 1609, and lived at Paithan. He is often spoken of as the master of the Ōvī metre, and his principal works are paraphrases of Sanskrit originals. He wrote part of a Mahābhārata, a Bhāgavata, a Śatamukha-Rāvaṇākhyāna, and, according to tradition, also a Rāmāyaṇa.

We have now come down to the time of Śivaji, the founder of the Marāṭhā power. This national hero, who is usually known as a rude and treacherous warrior, was himself influenced by the growing Marāṭhī literature, and its greatest poet courted his favour. He sat as a pupil at the feet of Rāmdās (1608-1681), the son of a Kulkarni in Jamb at the Godavari, who spent his life in devotion to Rāma, and hence changed his name Nārāyaṇ to Rāmdās. Śivaji is said at one time to have offered him his whole kingdom, but Rāmdās declined the offer, and continued till his death to live as an unmarried devotee. The principal work of this author is the Dāsabōdh, on religious duties, and he also wrote numerous Abhaṅgs and Ślōkas.

Tukārām (1608-1649) was born at Dehu, a small village to the north of Poona, and his father is said to have been a Śūdra. By profession he was a wandering reciter of Kathās or religious stories and legends, and he is considered to have brought the Abhaṅg to the highest perfection. His poetry is devoted to the praise of Viṭhōbā. Religious longing and devotion, affectionate love and moral purity, are the keynotes of his verses, many of which are also remarkable for the sincere consciousness they exhibit of the idea of sin,—an expression of religious faith rarely met with in older literature, but which was in later times imitated by poets such as Mahīpati.

A contemporary of Tukārām was Vāman Paṇḍit (died 1673), a Ṛigvēdin from Satara, who studied in Benares, and also wrote in Sanskrit. His style is heavy, and the predilection for yamakas and other artificial embellishments show the growing influence of the Sanskrit Kāvya. He wrote a commentary on the Bhagavadgītā in the Ōvī metre, called the Yathārthadīpikā, and numerous works based on the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Bhāgavata, and so on.

Śrīdhar (1678-1728), the most copious of all Marāṭha poets, was a Brāhmaṇ from the neighbourhood of Pandharpur. His works were mostly based on the Sanskrit epics and on the Purāṇas, and are highly popular. Some of the titles are Rāmavijaya, Harivijaya, Pāṇḍavapratapa, Śivalilāmṛita, and so on.

Amṛitarāya, who was a Dēśastha Brāhmaṇ, lived in Aurangabad about the middle of the eighteenth century. He was renowned as a śighrakavi,¹ and wrote also in Hindōstānī. His works are partly based on the Purāṇas, and are partly of a more metaphysical description. They abound in various kinds of alliterations. Like Tukārām he used to perform recitations.

A younger contemporary of Amṛitarāya was Mōrōpant or Mayūra Paṇḍit (1729-1794), a Karhādā Brāhmaṇ from Baramati in the Poona district. As a boy he acquired considerable proficiency in Sanskrit, in which language he also wrote some poems. His Marāṭhī works are largely influenced by Sanskrit poetry. He used all the artificial apparatus of Sanskrit rhetoric, and freely introduced Sanskrit words into his Marāṭhī. His works, which include a Bhārata, a Bhāgavata, several Rāmāyaṇas, a Mayūrakēkāvālī, and so forth, are held in high estimation among his countrymen, but are less palatable to European taste.

Mahipati (1715-1790), a Dēśastha Brāhmaṇ of the Ṛigvēdins from Tahrabad near Paithan, was an imitator of Tukārām, but his chief importance rests on the fact that he collected the popular traditions about national saints, and put them in a poetical form. His various works, such as the Bhaktavijaya, the Bhaktalilāmṛita, the Santavijaya, the Santalilāmṛita, are usually described as the Acta Sanctorum of the Marāṭhās. They are partly based on older works by Nābhājī and Udbhavachidgan, but partly also on oral tradition, and narrate the miraculous life and doings of older deified poets such as Dnyānōbā and Tukārām.

There are, besides, a great many minor poets, such as Chintāmaṇi, Raghunāth (end of eighteenth century), Prabhākara and others, who mainly based their poems on the Purāṇas, the Mahābhārata, and the Rāmāyaṇa. It is not, however, possible to enter into details.

Almost all the Marāṭhī poetry mentioned on this and the preceding pages is religious. Erotic lyrics have, however, also been highly appreciated by the Marāṭhās from the earliest times. We possess a precious testimony to this leaning of the national mind in the famous Sattasāi of Hāla. In modern Marāṭhī the erotic poetry is principally represented by the so-called Lāvaṇīs, small ballads usually put into the mouths of women, and often of a rather scandalous description. Among the authors of Lāvaṇīs we may mention Anantaphandī (1744-1819), a Yajurvedin from Ahmadnagar, who also mis-used his poetical genius in lavishing praise on Bājī Rāo, the last Peshwa, and Rāmjōśī (1762-1812), a Dēśastha Brāhmaṇ from Sholapur. In this connection we may also mention the Naukā Krīḍan of Viśvanāth, and the Anaṅgarāṅg of Kalyāna Mala.

¹ A śighrakavi is a poet who is able to compose a poem on any topic without preparation or delay, an improvisatore or extemporising poet.

The feats of the national heroes from Śivaji and downwards, have furnished materials for numerous Pāvāḍās, or war-ballads, mostly by nameless poets, which are sung everywhere in the country. Lastly, the numerous proverbs current among the Marāṭhās should be noticed. A good selection has been published by Manwaring. See Authorities below.

The prose literature in Marāṭhī is of much smaller importance. It embraces narratives of historical events, the so-called Bakhars; moral maxims such as the Vidur Nīti; folk tales, such as the Vēṭāl Pāntṣviṣī, the Simhāsan Battīṣī, the Śuk Bāhattarī, and so forth. In modern times a copious literature of prose works has arisen, mainly translations from English, and several journals and newspapers in Marāṭhī are published, chiefly in Bombay and Poona.

AUTHORITIES.

A.—Early references.

Mahārāshṭra as the name of a country, does not seem to occur before the sixth century A.D., when it is mentioned by Varāhamihira in his Bṛihat-Saṃhitā, v, 64. The reference to the language of Mahārāshṭra as the base of the principal Prākṛit in Daṇḍin's Kāvyādarśa, i, 35, belongs to about the same time.

The name was also known to the Chinese pilgrim Hiuen Tsiang, to Albirūnī, and to Ziāu-'d-dīn Barnī. See the references in Yule's Hobson-Jobson, s. v. Mahratta.

The first reference to Māhārāshṭrī as the name of a language seems to be in Vararuchi's Prākṛit Grammar, the date of which cannot be ascertained. Other grammarians simply use Prākṛitam, i.e., the Prākṛit language, instead.

Later authors, such as Rāmatarkavāgiśa and Kramadīśvara, mention a dialect called Dākshinātyā as a form of Apabhraṃśa, i.e., in this connection, as one of the vernaculars of India. Dākshinātyā is, in the Sāhitya Darpaṇa stated to be identical with Vaidarbhiḱā, the vernacular of Berar. Dākshinātyā is usually mentioned together with Māgadhī and Ardhamāgadhī and Professor Lassen was therefore inclined to class it with those dialects. We are not, however, told that Dākshinātyā has any characteristics of its own. On the contrary, Mārkaṇḍeya expressly states that Dākshinātyā is not a separate dialect, lakṣhaṇākaraṇāt, because it has no characteristic marks of its own. It is, therefore, impossible to base anything upon the names Dākshinātyā and Vaidarbhiḱā. They may, or may not, correspond to the modern Dakhiṇī and Varhāḍī, the dialects of the Dekhan and Berar respectively. Modern Marāṭhī is, at all events, so old that the mention of Dākshinātyā and Vaidarbhiḱā can refer to it. The oldest Marāṭhī inscription of which anything is known, goes back to about A.D. 1115-8, and an inscription of some extent is dated A.D. 1207. Compare Epigraphia Indica, Vol. i, pp. 343 and f.; Vol. vii, p. 109. It should be mentioned that a reference to the dialect of the Dākshinātyās, or Southerners, occurs in the Mṛichekhakatikā, where we are told that it was no distinct form of speech. On account of their knowledge of various aboriginal languages the Dākshinātyās are said to speak as they thought proper. The passages which might be expected to illustrate this dialect are, however, written in Śaurasēnī.

The first mention of the Marāṭhā country in Europe seems to be found in Friar Jordanus' Mirabilia Descripta (c. 1328). The passage containing the reference has been reprinted in Yule's Hobson-Jobson, l. c., and is as follows:—

'c 1328. "In this Greater India are twelve idolatrous Kings, and more . . . There is also the Kingdom of Maratha which is very great."—Friar Jordanus, 41.'

The same authority also reproduces the earliest mention of the Marāṭhī language of which I am aware. It has been taken from John Fryer's—A New Account of East India and Persia, London, 1698, and it is dated 1673. It is as follows :—

' 1673. " They tell their tale in Moratty : by Profession they are Gentues."—Fryer, 174.'

Other old references to the Marāṭhās and their country will be found in Hobson-Jobson. They may here be left out of consideration, and we shall turn to early mentions of the language.

The Konkan form of Marāṭhī was early dealt with by Portuguese missionaries, who called it the northern dialect of Kōṅkaṇī. A paraphrase of the contents of the Gospels in that language by Francisco Vas de Guimaraens, was printed in 1659, and a grammar by an unknown missionary was completed in the seventeenth century. See the authorities quoted under Konkan Standard below, p. 65.

The Kōṅkaṇī dialect was described at a still earlier date. The old references will be found among the authorities dealing with that form of speech. See p. 166.

Marāṭhī itself began to occupy European scholars early in the eighteenth century. It was considered to comprise two dialects, Balabande and Marāṭhī. In reality, however, these are only the two common characters used in writing Marāṭhī, Balabande corresponding to the Bālbōdh and Marāṭhī to the Mōḍī character.

Marāṭhī does not seem to be represented in the translations of the Lord's Prayer published by Joh. Chamberlayne in 1715. La Croze in a letter to Theophilus Siegfried Bayer dated November, 1731, mentions Marāṭhī as Marathica lingua, also called Balabande. He rightly remarks that the written character is identical with Dēvanāgarī. See Thesaurus epistolicus Lacrozianus, Vol. iii, Lipsiae 1746, p. 64, where a specimen of the written character is given. La Croze derives the alphabet from Hebrew.

In the same work, Vol. i, Lipsiae 1742, p. 338, is printed a letter from Benj. Schultze, the well-known author of one of the first Hindōstānī grammars, who for some time lived as a missionary in Madras. The letter is dated the 28th January 1734, and it contains the incidental remark that Schultze had sent specimens in the Dēvanāgarī and Balabande languages to Europe. We learn from other sources that he furnished translations of the Lord's Prayer into Marāṭhī. His manuscripts were preserved in Leipzig, and afterwards published in several collections, for the first time in the Orientalisch- und Occidentalischer Sprachmeister of Johann Friedrich Fritz. This book which was printed at Leipzig, 1748, was an enlarged reprint of a similar work by Johann Heinrich Hager, published in Leipzig, 1741, which is, in its turn, based on older collections by Andreas Müller. The Sprachmeister was, however, revised by the Danish Missionary Benj. Schultze, just mentioned, who added 15 Indian specimens from his own collections. It accordingly contains the Mōḍī character on pp. 94 and ff. which is called Marathicum Alphabetum. On pp. 120 and ff. some remarks on Hindōstānī, taken from Schultze's Grammatica Hindostanica, have been printed. We are here told that the Balabandish and Marathish language is a daughter of the Dewanāgara language, that is of Sanskrit. P. 124 gives the Balabandu, i.e., the Bālbōdh character. On p. 206, we find the first ten numerals in Marāṭhī figures. Between pp. 212 and 213 is inserted a comparative vocabulary called Tabula exhibens harum linguarum affinitatem et differentiam. The fifth and sixth columns in this table contain some words in Marāṭhī, with the headings Marathice and Balabandice, respectively. The two columns are identical. Column 9 contains the same words in Kōṅkaṇī, Cuncanice. To the Sprachmeister is annexed a collection of versions of the Lord's Prayer. It includes the Lord's Prayer in Goanica, p. 85; Balabandeca, p. 90; and Marathica, p. 93, all by Schultze. The Sprachmeister furnishes the materials for the mention of the 'Marathica' and 'Balabandeca' languages in the Alphabetum Brammhanicum seu Indostanum universitatis Kasí. Romæ, 1761, p. ix. This work, which was published by the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide, was soon followed by the Grammatica Marasta, Rom., 1778, and a Catechismo da Doutrina Cristam, Rom., 1778, in Portuguese and Marāṭhī.

From about the same time is Iwarus Abel's Symphona symphona, sive undecim Linguarum orientalium Discors exhibita Concordia, Tamulicæ videlicet . . . Marathicæ, Balabandicæ . . . Cuncanicæ . . . Kopenhagen, 1782.

Lorenzo Hervás y Panduro, a Spanish Jesuit from Galizia, also dealt with Marāṭhī in his huge cyclopedia Idea del Universo, Cesena, 1778-87. The twentieth volume has the title Vocabulario poligloto con Prolegomeni sopra più di cl Lingue, Cesena, 1787, and contains a comparison of 63 words in 154 languages. The Marāṭhī portion is printed on p. 163. The ensuing volume, the twenty-first, is a collection of versions of the Lord's Prayer in more than 300 languages and dialects. The title of this part is Saggio pratico delle Lingue con Prolegomeni e una Raccolta di Orazioni Dominicali in più di trecento Lingue e Dialetti. It contains a Marāṭhī version on p. 143, and a Goanese one on p. 145, both after Benj. Schultze, and also, on p. 146, another Marāṭhī version, after the Catechism, mentioned above.

Some Marāṭhī words are also given in the Russian publication Glossarium comparativum Linguarum totius Orbis. St. Petersburg, 1787. They were reprinted by Franz Carl Alter in his book Ueber die Samskrdamische Sprache, Vienna, 1794.

A short review of the older works will be found in Adelung's Mithridates. See below.

The Scriptures were partly translated into Marāṭhī by the Serampore missionaries. The New Testament and the Pentateuch were published in 1807; the prophetic books in 1821. A Kōṅkaṇī translation of the Bible appeared at Serampore in 1819.

The list of authorities which follows does not include the works mentioned in the preceding pages. It should be compared with the shorter lists printed below under Konkani Standard and Kōṅkaṇī. See pp. 65 and 166.

Marāṭhī is usually written in the so-called Bālbōdh or in the so-called Mōḍī character.¹

Written character.

Bālbōdh, lit. 'teachable to children' is identical with Dēva-nāgarī, and has been described in Vol. v. Part ii, pp. 7 and ff.

It is used in almost all printed books, and also, to a great extent, in private transactions and letters. The Mōḍī character is almost totally confined to the latter kind of writing. An example of its use will be found on pp. 259 and ff. It consists of the following signs:—

 य ya र ra ल la व va
 श śa ष sha स sa ह ha
 ळ ḷa क्ष ksha ण्य dnya

The forms of the vowels given above are only used at the beginning of words or syllables. When the vowels follow a consonant they are expressed by means of secondary signs in the same way as in the Dēvanāgarī alphabet. For the sake of teaching these signs the alphabet is disposed in Bārākhḍīs, or series of twelve letters, each containing a consonant combined with all possible vocalic sounds. Such Bārākhḍīs are:—

क-क-मी-मी-ऊ-ऊ-रे-रे-रे-रे-क-कः
ka kā ki kī ku kū kē kai kō kau kaṁ kaḥ ग-ग-गी-गी-उ-उ-गे-गे-गो-गो-गं-गाः ga gā gi gī gu gū gē gai go gau gaṁ gaḥ
 ट-ट-ती-ती-रु-रु-रे-रे-ले-ले-रं-लः
ṭa ṭā ṭi ṭī ṭu ṭū ṭē ṭai ṭō ṭau ṭaṁ ṭaḥ

A short note on the Modi Character by B. A. Gupte will be found in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. xxxiv, 1905, pp. 27 and ff.

In Kōṅkaṇī the Kanarese and also the Roman alphabet are often used for the printing and writing of the dialect. Compare below p. 167. The Kanarese letters have been described in Volume IV under Kanarese.

Mr. Beames has justly pointed out that Marāṭhī has ‘a very decided individuality, a type quite its own, arising from its comparative isolation for so many centuries.’ The vocabulary chiefly consists of Tadbhavas of different age. The loans from Persian are comparatively unimportant. On the other hand, old Tadbhavas have, since the revival of Marāṭhī literature, to some extent been replaced by Sanskrit loan-words. Thus, we now find prasād, favour, instead of the pasāy of Dnyānōbā’s poetry; gambhīr, deep, instead of his gahīru; nāth, a lord, instead of his nāh, and so on. The general character of Marāṭhī has been described by Mr. Beames as follows:—‘Marāṭhī is one of those languages which one may call playful—it delights in all sorts of jingling formations and has struck out a larger quantity of secondary and tertiary words, diminutives, and the like, than any of the other tongues.’

Pronunciation.—The short a is pronounced like the u in English ‘but.’ In Kōṅkaṇī, however, it assumes the open sound of o in ‘hot,’ as is also the case in Bengali. Thus, rotsā, to go. A short a is inherent in every consonant which is not combined with any other vowel. In poetry this short a is always pronounced. Thus, ghar, a house, is pronounced ghara. Such a word is, therefore, said to be disyllabic. In the same way gharās, to a house, is said to have three syllables, and so on. On the other hand, in everyday speech the final short a of a polysyllabic word is not pronounced. Thus, ghar, a house; bahīṇ, a sister.

In a word of three syllables, which ends in a vowel other than a, a short a in the penultimate is slurred; thus, tsāl^aṇī, a sieve. In words of four syllables a short a in the antepenultimate is silent; thus, kar^avat, a saw. In a word of five syllables a short a in the second syllable, and, if the word does not end in a silent a, in the penultimate is silent. Thus, sār^akhavat, resemblance; var^atar^alā, an extra payment. The short a in compound words is dropped in the same cases as in the uncompounded word. Thus, vi-sar^alā, he forgot; kaḷ^akaḷ^aṇē, to be agitated.

These rules are observed in the Konkan, in the northern part of the Dekhan, Berar, and the Central Provinces. In the Dekhan south of Poona every short a is fully sounded, though the educated classes try to conform their speech to the Poona standard; thus, visaralā, he forgot. A final a is, however, in most cases silent. This tendency to pronounce the short a is probably due to the influence of the neighbouring Kanarese. It is most strongly developed in Kolhapur where even the short final a is often fully sounded; thus, dōna, two. Similar is the case in the dialect of the Saraswat Brahmans of Karwar. See below, pp. 188 and ff.

Short and long a are often interchangeable with ē, more especially in the termination ē of neuter bases, of the instrumental and of verbal forms, and in the termination ēn of the future. Thus, gharē, gharā, and gharā, houses; bāpā-nē and bāpā-nā, by the father; sāṅgit^alē and sāṅgit^alā or sāṅgit^alā, it was said; mhaṇēn, mhaṇān, or mhaṇan, I shall say. The a-forms are not admitted into literature or into the language of the educated classes in the Dekhan, but are quite common in the Konkan, Berar and the Central Provinces.

Short i and u as final vowels only occur in loan-words such as matī, intelligence; bhānu, sun. In the dialect of the Saraswat Brahmans of Karwar, however, final i and u are quite common.

I and u are always long in the penultimate of words ending in a silent a ; thus mārīt, striking ; lākūḍ, wood ; ūs, a sugarcane. They are short when they are followed by a full nasal sound ; thus, unt, camel. These rules, however, only apply to the language of the educated classes.

When a word is inflected or ends in a long vowel the long i and ū of the penultimate are shortened or changed to ⁠; thus, mārīt, striking, mārītā or mār^atā, while striking.

A long ā is apparently also shortened under the same conditions, though it is written as long, thus, hatās, written hātās, to the hand ; kanās, written kānās, to the ear. In such cases a has the sound of a in Italian ballo.

Ē is commonly pronounced as yē ; thus, yēk and ēk, one. This form is common everywhere with the exception of Poona and the neighbourhood. Literary forms such as yēnē, to come ; yēthē ; and ēthē, here, etc., show that the pronunciation of ē as yē has been common all over the Marāṭhī country. Ē is commonly interchangeable with yā ; thus, tē, or tyā, *vēlē*s, at that time. Compare śam-bhar, for śyam-bhar, and śēm-bhar, hundred.

The Anusvāra is commonly written before surd consonants in order to denote the nasal corresponding to the consonant. Thus, उंट unt, a camel ; मांडी māṇḍī, a thigh. Such nasals occur before soft mutes, and also, if the preceding vowel is short, before hard mutes. In other cases the Anusvāra coalesces with the preceding vowel to a nasal vowel which is indicated by means of the Anunāsika. Thus, आत āt, inside ; भोव्वाī, an eyebrow. In Sanskrit words the Anunāsika before r, ś, sh, s, and h is pronounced as a nasal ṛ, and before y, l, and v as a nasal ṝ, ṝl, ṝv, respectively. Thus, saṁsār, the world ; saṁhār, destruction of the universe ; saṁyōg, junction.

The Anunāsika is often dropped, or, when it is considered necessary to pronounce it distinctly, in order to distinguish between forms which would otherwise be confounded, replaced by n. The latter pronunciation is especially used in honorific words such as tyānlā, to him (honorific plural). Thus, gharāt, in the house ; tyā-nē, by him. In the Southern Konkan, however, the nasal pronunciation is very marked.

The gutturals, dentals, and labials are pronounced as in Sanskrit.

The palatals are pronounced as in Sanskrit in words borrowed from that language and from Hindōstānī, and in Marāṭhī words before i, ī, ē, and y ; thus, chaṇḍ, fierce ; jamā, collected ; chikhal, mud ; bāpā-chē ghar, the father's house ; mājhyā gharāt, in my house. Ch is also pronounced in the same way in chār, four. This form is derived from Prākṛit chattāri and chaūrō probably through the steps chaāri, chyār ; compare ghōḍyās from ghōḍaassa, ghōḍāās, to a horse. The numeral 'forty' is usually pronounced tsālīs. In other cases the palatals are pronounced as ts, tsh, dz, dzh, respectively. In the Konkan this pronunciation is also common before ē. Thus, tsākar, a servant ; dzāṇē, to go ; dzē (Konkan), which.

Jñ is pronounced as dny, or, in the Konkan, as gy ; thus, dnyān or gyān, knowledge. The sound only occurs in borrowed words.

The cerebrals are usually pronounced as in Sanskrit. The cerebral ḍ after vowels is, however, pronounced as an r in the Central and Northern Konkan, and as an ṛ in some dialects in Berar and the Central Provinces, and probably also elsewhere. Thus, ghōḍā, ghōṛā and ghōṛā, a horse. We may compare the change of ḍ to ṛ between vowels in Māhārāshṭrī-Prākṛit ; thus, Sanskrit taḍāga, Māhārāshṭrī taḷāa, Marāṭhī taḷē, a tank. In some rustic dialects in Berar ḍ is, in a similar way, often confounded with ṛ ; thus, ghōḷā, a horse ; dzavaḍ, near. The cerebral ṇ is often confounded with the dental n, though both have a different origin, thus, pānī instead of pāñī, water. It has often been stated that the cerebral n is more common in the Konkan. This statement, however, only applies to the Kōnkaṇī dialect, where the two sounds seem to be correctly distinguished. In Nagpur every dental n is said to become cerebral. All the specimens forwarded for the use of this Survey, however, give a dental n in all places.

Marāṭhī possesses a cerebral (ऌ) as well as a dental (ऎ) l-sound. The former is derived from a single l between vowels in Prākṛit, the latter from a double ll; thus, kāl, Māhārāshṭrī kālō, time; phul, Māhārāshṭrī phullam, flower. The cerebral l is pronounced by putting the tip of the tongue against the palate and allowing the air to pass on both sides. On the coast, from Thana to Rajapur, the cerebral l has become dental, and in Berar and the Central Provinces it is often pronounced as an r or as a y. Thus, mālī, mālī, mārī, and māyī, a gardener.

The consonant v has a sound between v and w. It is produced by bringing both the lips (not only the lower one as in English) in contact with the upper teeth, the rounding of the lips being less than in pronouncing a w. Before i, ī, ē, y, and h it sounds almost like a v, while in other positions it approaches the sound of w. A final v coalesces with a preceding vowel to a kind of diphthong; thus, gāv, a village, pronounced almost as gāō or gāō̃. Before i, ī, and ē, a v has a tendency to be dropped. Thus, we find istō and vistar, fire; īs and vīs, twenty, yēl and vēl, time. Such forms occur all over the Marāṭhī country, especially in rustic dialects.

Marāṭhī has two s-sounds, a dental s and a palatal ś. The latter is used before i, ī, and ē, and y, and in loan-words from Sanskrit and Persian. Thus, śimphī, a caste name; śīl, a stone; śēt, field; śyām, blue. Similarly śam-bhar, instead of śyam-bhar or śēm-bhar, hundred. Dialectically every ś is changed to s. A cerebral sh only occurs in borrowed words such as śēsh, rest; śōsh^añē̃, to dry up. It is pronounced as an ś.

Aspirated letters have often lost their aspiration, thus, hāt, Prākṛit hattha, hand; māḍz, Prākṛit majjha, waist; sāṅg^añē̃, Prākṛit saṅghaḥ, to say. In the Southern Konkan and Dekhan, where Marāṭhī borders on Kanarese, disaspiration is almost the rule.

Nouns.—Nouns may end in a short silent a, or in a long vowel, including ē, with or without nasalisation. A few nouns end in ai, ō, and au. Final i and u only occur in borrowed words such as kavī, a poet; matī, intelligence; dhēnu, a cow.

The bases of nouns are weak, when they end in a short inherent a, or strong, when they end in a long vowel or a diphthong. Thus, weak, ghar, house; bhint, wall: strong, ghōḍā, horse; mōtī̃, pearl. The long final of strong bases is derived from contraction. Thus, ghōḍā goes back to a Prākṛit ghōḍai; mōtī̃ to a Prākṛit mottiam.

Gender.—There are three genders, masculine, feminine, and neuter. The neuter is used to denote inanimate beings, and also animate beings in the plural where both the natural genders are included, or the gender is left undecided; thus, māñ^asē̃, people. In the Konkan the neuter singular is commonly used to denote females before the age of puberty; thus, chēḍū̃, a girl. In the plural the neuter is often used as a honorific feminine; thus, bāī-sāhēb ālī̃, the lady came.

Strong bases ending in ā are, if they are not borrowed words, masculine. The corresponding feminine and neuter terminations are ī and ē̃, respectively; thus, mul^agā, a boy; mul^agī̃, a girl; mul^agē̃, a child.

Number.—There are two numbers, the singular and the plural. Of masculine nouns only those ending in ā, which take ē̃ instead of ā, change for the plural. Thus, bāp, father, fathers; but ghōḍā, a horse; ghōḍē̃, horses.

Most feminine nouns add ā in the plural; thus, jībh, a tongue, plural jībhā; ghōḍī, a mare, plural ghōḍyā; bāy^akō, a woman, plural bāy^akā. Compare borrowed words such as kathā, a tale, plural kathā.

Most feminine nouns ending in a short silent a form their plural in this way. They are derived from Prākṛit bases ending in ā; thus, jībh, a tongue, goes back to a Prākṛit jībbhā. In Prākṛit there was also a large class of feminine nouns ending in ī. This final ī must be dropped in Marāṭhī, and these old ī-bases, therefore, look exactly like old ā-bases. Thus, jībh, a tongue, Prākṛit jībbhā; mūṭh, a fist, Prākṛit mūṭthī. These two classes are, however, distinguished in declension, and the old ī-bases form their plural, not in ā, but in ī; thus, bhint-ī, walls; vēl-ī, creepers, etc. To this class belong many verbal nouns which in the nominative are identical with the verbal base. Thus, bhēṭ, a meeting, from bhēṭ^aṇē, to meet; ṭhēv, a deposit from ṭhēv^aṇē, to deposit, and so forth.

Some feminine nouns ending in ū do not change in the plural; thus, dārū, liquor and liquors.

Neuter nouns ending in ē form their plural in ī, all other neuter nouns add ē; thus, talē, a tank, plural talī; ghar, a house, plural gharē; mōṭī, a pearl, plural mōṭyē, and so forth.

Words ending in i and u do not change in the plural; thus, kavi, a poet, poets; dhēnu, a cow, cows.

Case.—Cases are formed by adding postpositions, not, however, to the base, but to a modification of it called the oblique form. There are, besides, some remains of the old synthetic cases of the Prākṛits. The most common of those old forms is a dative ending in s; thus, bāpās, to a father. Bāpās is derived from Prākṛit bappassa, the genitive of bappō, a father, the genitive having replaced the dative in all Prākṛits. The origin of the form has, however, been forgotten, and s is now used exactly like other dative suffixes and is added to the oblique base of all nouns; thus, mul^agyās, to daughters. The original force of a genitive can still be seen in the Konkan where this form in s is often used as an oblique base. See p. 66 below.

An old locative occurs in forms such as gharī, in the house; pāyā, at the feet. It is very common in poetry. In the Konkan we find another old locative in the word gēr, in the house.

An old instrumental ends in ē, plural ī and hī; thus, kumarē, by the boy; kāuḷī, by the crows; īśvarēhī, by the lord (honorific plural). Such forms are mostly confined to poetry.

The oblique form of borrowed words ending in i and u ends in ī, plural ī, and ū, plural ū, respectively. Thus, kavi, a poet, obl. sing. kavī; dhēnu, a cow, obl. plur. dhēnū.

Masculine bases ending in ā and neuter bases ending in ē change ā and ē to yā, plural yā in the oblique form. Thus, ghōḍā, a horse, obl. sing. ghōḍyā, obl. plur. ghōḍyā; talē, a tank, obl. sing. talīyā, obl. plur. talīyā. Ē is often substituted for yā, thus ghōḍē-lā, to the horse. Rād_zā, a king, often rejects the y of the oblique form in writing; thus, rājā-kadē, to the king. The same is also the case in other words after palatals, the y being only seen in the palatal pronunciation of the preceding consonant.

All other masculine and neuter bases add ā, plural ā in the oblique form. Thus, bāp, a father, obl. bāpā, plur. bāpā; mōṭī, a pearl, obl. plur. mōṭyā.

Masculine bases ending in ū, however, usually retain the ū; thus, tsākū, a pen-knife, obl. plur. tsākū. In other bases ending in ū the oblique form often also ends in ā or vā; thus, nātū, a grandson, obl. nātū, nātā, and nātāvā. Bhāū, a brother, usually forms bhāvā. Many neuter bases in ū, especially all diminutives, add ū, plur. yā; thus, karādū, a kid, obl. karādū; plur. karādē, obl. karādya. In the Konkan both masculine and neuter ū-bases often add vā, plur. vā; thus, lādū, a cake, obl. lādāvā.

The oblique singular of feminine nouns ending in ī, ū, and ō is like the base; thus, gādī, a cart, obl. gādī; bāyākō, a wife, obl. bāyākō. Old ī-stems ending in a silent a take ī; thus, āg, fire; obl. āgī. Old ā-stems ending in a silent a and borrowed words ending in ā form the oblique base in ē; thus, jībh, tongue, obl. jībhē; kathā, a tale, obl. kathē. The same is often the case with feminine ū-bases in the Konkan, and feminine ī-bases in Kōṅkaṇī. Thus, dzaḷū, a leech, obl. dzaḷū and dzaḷvē; rāṇī, a queen, obl. rāṇyē. In female names ending in ā the polite oblique form ends in ā; thus, Yamunā-kaḍē, to Yamunā. The oblique plural is the nasalised plural base; thus, gādyā, carriages, obl. gādyā.

In Berar and the Central Provinces the nasalisation of the oblique plural is often dropped and a hī, ī or hā may be added. Thus, bāpā-hī-kaḍē, to the fathers.

An old oblique plural ending in n occurs in compounds such as paīsān-paīsā, every pice; gharan-ghar, every house.

The usual postpositions will be found in the Skeleton Grammar. It should be noted that the dative is also used to denote the object of transitive verbs when it denotes a person, or, else, when it is emphasised, as is also the case in connected languages; thus, tyā-nē Rāmā-lā hākūn dilē, he drove away Rama; hyā nās'kyā āmbayā-lā kāy mī khāñ, what, shall I eat this rotten mango?

Adjectives.—Adjectives are not inflected unless they end in ā, in which case they form their feminine in ī, and their neuter in ē. The plural then ends in ē, fem. yā, neut. ī, and the oblique form in yā or ē; thus tsāng'lā mānūs, a good man; tsāng'lyā bāyākā, good women; tsāng'lī mulē, good children. The oblique form is used before inflected nouns. The genitive in tsā is such an adjective; thus, bāpā-chyā gharāt, in the father's house; tsāng'lyā mul'gyās, to good girls. The suffix tsā is also used to form ordinary adjectives from nouns; thus, ghar'tsā belonging to the house.

Verbs.—Verbs are quoted in the form of the verbal noun ending in nē; thus, kar'nē, to do. The old present tense, which is used in poetry to denote all times, has developed into a habitual past; thus karī, I used to do. In the negative it expresses unwillingness in the past; thus, tō gharāt dāi-nā, he house-into would-not-go. The imperative and the future are likewise old forms; thus, karīn, I shall do; kar, do. All other tenses are formed from participles. The present participle is used in the formation of present tenses, the past participle passive forms the past tense, and a present conjunctive is formed from the future participle passive; thus, mī uṭh'tō, I rise; mī uṭh'lō, I rose; mī uṭhāvā or myā uṭhāvē, I should, or may, rise.

The tenses formed from the present participle are all active, and the subject of the sentence is also the subject of the verb and agrees with the latter in number, person, and gender; thus, tō kar'tō, he does; tī kar'tē, she does. This construction is called by Native grammarians the kartari prayōga, the Active construction.

The past participle has a different meaning in intransitive and in transitive verbs. In intransitive verbs its meaning is an active one. Thus, gēlā, Sanskrit gata, means 'gone,' 'having gone.' The past tense of intransitive verbs is accordingly used in the Active construction; thus, mī uṭh'lō, I rose.

The past participle of transitive verbs is passive. Thus, while vāchit means 'reading,' vāchilā means 'having been read,' 'read.' 'The boy reads a book' is mul^agā pōthī vāchitō, but 'the boy read a book' must be expressed 'a book was read by the boy,' mul^agyā-nē pōthī vāchilī. Here the verb agrees in number, person, and gender with the object. This construction is called the karmanī prayōga, or Passive construction and is used in all cases where the object is uninflected.

In other cases the participle is put in the neuter gender, and the object of the verb is put in the dative. Instead of 'I killed him' we thus say 'a killing was done by me with reference to him,' myā tyā-lā mārīlē. This is called the bhāvē prayōga, or Impersonal construction. It is used when the object is inflected, that is, in most cases where the object of a transitive verb is a person. In the Konkan, however, the passive construction is often also used in such cases.

The future participle passive or participle of necessity never has an active sense. Thus, tsālāvē means 'to be gone,' eundum; and mārāvē, which is to be killed, interficiendum. The tenses formed from this participle of intransitive verbs should accordingly be expected to be used in the impersonal construction; thus, myā uṭhāvē, it is to be risen by me, I should rise. A tendency exists, however, to forget the passive force of the participle, and thus we often find the active construction, the participle agreeing in gender, number, and person with the subject. Thus, tō uṭhāvā, he may, or might, rise; tī uṭhāvī, she may rise, etc. In the case of transitive verbs either the passive or the impersonal construction is used. Thus, ap^arādh na karāvā, sin should not be committed; myā vātsāvē, I should read.

The preceding remarks will have shown that transitive and intransitive verbs differ in construction in the past tense and in the subjunctive. There are, however, some transitive verbs which take the active construction in their past tense. Such verbs are tar^anē, to pass over; padh^anē, to study; pāv^anē, to obtain; pinē, to drink; bōl^anē, to speak; mhan^anē, to say; lēnē, to put on; visar^anē, to forget; śik^anē, to learn; samad^anē, to understand; har^anē, to loose, etc. Thus, tō bōl^alō, he said; tī dhadā śik^alī, she has learnt her lesson.

The Marāṭhī verb is generally stated to have two conjugations. The first comprises intransitive verbs and such transitives as use the active construction, the second most transitives. Verbs ending in vowels and h form their present tense after the first conjugation. Verbs ending in h form their past tense after the second conjugation, while the past tense of vocalic roots is irregular.

Both conjugations agree in the formation of most tenses. They differ in the following particulars. In the present and past participles and in tenses formed from them an i is inserted between the base and the suffixes in the second conjugation, while verbs following the first insert an a. Thus mārīt, striking; uṭhat, arising; mārīlā, struck; uṭhālā, arisen. Similarly the characteristic vowel of the habitual past and the future is i in the second, and ē, or, dialectically, ā, in the first conjugation. Thus, mī karīn, I shall do; mī uṭhēn, or uṭhān, I shall arise.

The two conjugations are, however, continually confounded, not only in poetry, but also in the current speech of the people, especially in Berar, the Central Provinces, and the Konkan.

The terminations of the various persons will be found in the Skeleton Grammar on pp. 30 and f. It should, however, be noted that the difference between the second and third persons has a strong tendency to disappear. The details are as follows.

In the singular the second person usually takes the form of the third person in Berar and the Central Provinces. Thus, tu āhē, thou art; tu gēlā, thou wentest. In Kōṅkaṇī the second person usually ends in y; thus, tū āsāy, thou art.

In the plural the second person often has the same termination as the third in Dekhan and Kōṅkaṇī; thus, āhāt, Kōṅkaṇī āsāt, you are; in Sholapur even āhōt, we are. In Berar and the Central Provinces the second person plural of the past tense is usually like the third, and in Kōṅkaṇī also the first person plural takes the same form. Thus, Berar gēlē, you went, they went; Kōṅkaṇī gele, we went, you went, they went.

A dialectical termination of the second person plural is v, which is found in a few cases in the Konkan, thus, hāv and hā, you are; mār^aśiv, you shall strike.

The third person singular often ends in n in the Konkan, Berar, and the Central Provinces, regularly only in the past tense of transitive verbs. Thus, tyā-na sāṅgit^alān, he said.

The verb substantive has in the Konkan a form different from that used in other districts, ā being substituted for ō; thus, mī hāy instead of mī hōy, I am.

The present tense of finite verbs will be found in the Skeleton Grammar. Instead of the termination ē of the first person singular neuter, however, we commonly find ō in the Dekhan; thus, mī karitō, I (neuter subject) do. The termination tē used with a subject of the feminine gender is commonly replaced by tī in the Dekhan and tyē in the Konkan. Thus, tī karitī, or karityē, she does.

In the Konkan, Berar, and the Central Provinces, the present tense is very commonly formed by adding the abbreviated verb substantive to the present participle without any change for gender. Thus, Konkan mī sōditāy, that is sōdit-hāy, I seek; Berar tō, tē, yētē, he, she, comes; Nagpur tē dātēt, they go.

The past and future participles passive are commonly used as verbal nouns. The past participle passive in such cases takes a subject in the nominative, in the same way as when it is used as a past tense. A postposition is afterwards added, the participle being inflected like an ordinary noun. Thus, tum-chī tsāk^arī sōḍilyā-var, your service left-on, on having left your service; tujhī āi vār^alyā-pāsūn, thy mother dead-from, since your mother's death.

The future participle passive is used in the dative and genitive cases as an infinitive of purpose, a verbal noun, and a gerundive. Thus, bāg pāh^aryās tsālā, go to see the garden; vāt^asāv^ayā-chē pustak, a book to read; mī marāv^ayā-tsī nīhī, I am not to die.

The usual verbal nouns will be found in the Skeleton Grammar. Several other dialectical forms occur; thus, tsārāvā-lā, in order to tend (Konkan, Berar, Central Provinces), formed from a base tsārāv; karā-lē, in order to do; tsārāy-lē, in order to tend (same localities), form a verbal noun tsār; tsār^ayā-lē, in order to tend (Berar), from a verbal noun tsārē, and so on.

The conjunctive participle usually ends in ūn; thus, karūn, having done. Besides this there is a form ending in ōn, corresponding to poetical forms ending in ōn, ōni, ōniyā. It is occasionally met with all over the Marāṭhī country; thus, nighōn, having gone out.

Several forms of the transitive verb are, as has already been pointed out, in reality passive. There is, accordingly, no necessity for a separate passive voice. Marāṭhī has further preserved many verbal doublets, the one being intransitive or an old passive, the other an active verb. Thus, gaḷ^anē, to drop; gāl^anē, to strain: tsar^anē, to graze; tsār^anē, to cause to graze, to feed: paḍ^anē, to fall; pāḍ^anē, to fell: tut^anē, to be

The oblique base is used as a Vocative; thus, bāpā, O father. Other cases are formed by adding postpositions to the oblique form. Some of these are nē, plur. nī (case of the agent), nē, plur. nī and sī (Instrumental); s, lā, plur. s, lā, nā (Dative); hūn, ūn (Ablative); tsā, f. chī, n. chē (Genitive). The Accusative is usually the same as the Nominative. Thus bāp, a father; Instrumental bāpā-nē, plur. bāpī-nī; Genitive bāpī-tsā. The Dative termination s is no true postposition; thus, bāpās, to a father. Old Locatives are gharī, in the house; pīyā, at the feet.

III.—VERBS.

A.—Auxiliary Verbs and Verbs Substantive.

	I am, etc.	I was, etc.	I am not.
Sing. 1.	hōy or hōy .	āhē .	hōtō , f. hōtē , n. hōtē .	navhē , or nāhī .
2.	hōs .	āhēs .	hōtās , f. hōtis , n. hōtēs .	navhas , navhēs , or nāhīs .
3.	hōy .	āhē .	hōtā , f. hōtī , n. hōtē .	navhē , or nāhī .
Plur. 1.	vhō , hō , or hōḍ .	āhō .	hōtō .	navhō , or nāhī .
2.	vhā .	āhā .	hōtā .	navhā , or nāhī .
3.	hōt .	āhēt .	hōtē , f. hōtyā , n. hōtī .	navhēt , navhat , or nāhīt .

The negative Past is navhatō, I was not, etc. The second form of the Present, āhē, etc., means 'to be,' 'to exist,' while hōy, etc., is the pure verb substantive. As^gnē, to be, is conjugated regularly, but the present as^gtō, etc., is used as a Habitual Present, 'I usually am'; and the Past tense, as^glō, etc., is used as a Past Conditional, 'should I be,' etc.

Pāhijē, it is wanted, is used with the past participle passive or the dative of the verbal noun; thus ma-lā gēlē pāhijē, I want, or must, go; tu-lā karāyā pāhijē, thou must do. The corresponding negative is nakō; thus, tyā-lā yāv^gyās nakō, he does not want to come. Nakō with the Infinitive forms a negative Imperative. Thus, dēū nakō, don't give.

B.—Finite Verb.

FIRST CONJUGATION.—*Uṭh*ṇē*, to rise.Infinitive, uṭhū.Verbal Nouns.—(1) *uṭh*ṇē*; (2) uṭhāyās, -yā-lā, -yā-chē; (3) *uṭhāv*ās*, -yā-lā, -yā-chē; (4) *uṭh*lē*.Participle, Pres., uṭhat; Pa-t, *uṭh*lā*, *uṭh*lēlā*; Future, *uṭh*ṇār*; Noun of Agency, *uṭh*ṇārā*.Conjunctive Participle, uṭhūn, having risen.Adverbial Participle, *uṭh*tā*, *uṭh*tā-nā*, while rising.

Present Definite, I am rising, etc., mī uṭhat āhē, etc.Imperfect, I was rising, etc., mī uṭhat hōtō, f. hōtē, n. hōtē, etc.Present habitual, I usually rise, etc., *mī uṭhat as*tō*, f. -tē, n. -tē.Perfect and Pluperfect, formed by adding, respectively, āhē and hōtō to the Past tense; thus, *tū uṭh*lā āhēs*, thou hast risen, etc.Past Conditional, had I risen, etc., *mī uṭh*tō*, etc., inflected like the Past tense.SECOND CONJUGATION.—*mār*ṇē*, to strike.Participles, Present, mārīt; Past, mār'lā; Future, *mār*ṇār*.

	Past, I struck, etc.		Past habitual, I usually struck, etc.	Future, I shall strike, etc.	Subjunctive, I should strike, etc.
	Passive construction.	Impersonal construction.			Passive construction.	Impersonal construction.
Sing. 1	myā	myī	mārī .	mārīn .	myā	myā
2	tvā	tvā	mārīs .	mārīsīl .	tvā	tvā
3	tyā-nē , etc.	mārīlā , f. -lī, n. -lē.	mārī .	mārīl .	tyā-nē , etc.	tyā-nē , etc.
Plur. 1	āmhī	plūral, -lē, f. lyā, n. -lī.	mārū .	mārū .	āmhī	mārāve .
2	tumhī	tumhī	mārā .	mārāl .	tumhī	tumhī
3	tyā-nī	tyā-nī	mārīt .	mārītīl .	tyā-nī	tyā-nī

S is often added in the second person singular of the Past tense; thus, *tvē jēv*ṇāval kēlīs*, thou madest a feast.Other forms agree with the first Conjugation. Thus, mī mārītō, etc., I strike; mār, strike.

C.—Irregular Verbs.—Verbs ending in vowels and in h form their present after the first and their future and habitual past after the second conjugation. Thus, dētō, I give; yēīn, I shall come; yēī, he usually came. Those ending in h form their past in ilā; thus, rāhīlā, he remained. In the verb hōṇē, to become, hō is changed to vh before ā; thus, vhā, become ye.

Some verbs form their Past in ālā; thus, nighālā, he went out; mhanālā, he said. T is inserted before lā in ghēṇē, to take; *ghāl*ṇē*, to put; dhunē, to wash; *bagh*ṇē*, to see; *māg*ṇē*, to ask; *sāṅg*ṇē*, to tell; thus, *ghēt*lē*, *ghāt*lē*, *dhut*lē*, *baghit*lē*, *māgit*lē*, *sāṅgit*lē*. T is inserted in *khan*ṇē*, to dig; *mhan*ṇē*, to say; *hān*ṇē*, to slay; thus, *khan*lē* and *khan*lē*; *mhat*lē* and mhanālē; *hāt*lē*. Roots ending in i add ālē; thus, pyālē, drank (root pi); bhyālē, feared (root bhī). So also lēṇē, to wear, Past lyālē. *Kar*ṇē*, to do, forms kētē; *mar*ṇē*, to die, mēlē; dēṇē, to give, dīlē. Irregular are hōṇē, to become, Past, dhālā, and dhāhālā; yēṇē, to come, Past, ālā; dzāṇē, to go, Past gēlā.

D.—Causal Verbs.—Causatives are formed by adding av, āv, or, in roots ending in long vowels and h, rav and avav respectively. Thus, *bas*vinē*, to cause to sit; *dēv*vinē*, to cause to give. In the Dekhan iv is substituted for av, and this is now generally adopted in the Imperative; thus *kar*iv*, let him do. Causatives follow the second conjugation.

E.—Potential Verbs.—Formed as causal verbs, but follow the first conjugation. They always use the passive or the impersonal construction, the subject being put in the Dative or in the Instrumental formed from the Genitive. Thus, Rāmā-lā, or Rāmā-chyā-nē bhākar *khāv*ratē*, Rāma can eat bread; *ma-lā tsālāv*lē*, I could go.

It is probable that much of this total in reality refers to a form of speech similar to that current in the Konkan. We know this to be the case with the Kun^abīs of Poona. The difference between the two dialects is not, however, so important that any serious disadvantage will arise from the whole total being put down as belonging to Dēśī.

The Dēśī form of the language is also to some extent spoken by the educated classes all over the Marāṭhī territory, and by settlers from the Dekhan throughout India. In most cases no detailed figures are available, and the estimates forwarded from Janjira, Kolaba, and Ratnagiri have therefore been put down as belonging to the Konkan form of Marāṭhī, though many of the educated classes speak pure Dēśī.

The speakers of Marāṭhī in those parts of India where it is not a vernacular have been returned as speaking Marāṭhī, without mention of sub-dialect. The figures will be found in the general introduction to the group. See above p. 2.

Standard Marāṭhī in the Dekhan form, has, however, been reported from several districts outside the territory where that dialect is spoken as a vernacular. The details, so far as they could be ascertained, are as follows.

In the Bombay Presidency Standard Marāṭhī has been returned from Kanara and Savanur. The ensuing estimates of the number of speakers have been forwarded by the local authorities,—

Kanara	2,000
TOTAL													2,800

In Berar, where a slightly different dialect is current in most districts, settlers from the Dekhan have brought the Standard form of the language with them. It has only been returned from Akola and Ellichpur, and the numbers of speakers have been estimated as follows:—

TOTAL														5,250

One thousand of the speakers in Akola and all in Ellichpur have been returned as speaking 'Dakhiṇī Marāṭhī.' They are stated to be immigrants from the south. The western part of Buldana belongs linguistically to the Dekhan, and the speakers of Marāṭhī in that district have been included in the total given above on p. 32.

In Central India Marāṭhī, in the form which this language assumes in the Dekhan, is the court language in the Indore State, and it is also spoken by Dakhiṇī Brāhman and Marāṭhās in the Sajapur district of Gwalior and in Bhopal. The revised figures are as follows,—

Indore	77,000
Gwalior	1,000
Bhopal	3,300
TOTAL														81,300

In the Central Provinces the language of Poona and surrounding districts is sometimes called Punēkari. Almost all the speakers are found to the north of the Satpura plateau, in the Saugor and Narbada territories. These districts once belonged to the Garha-Mandla dynasty of Gōṇḍ, but were finally handed over to the Peshwa in 1781 and thence for some time formed part of the Marāṭhā principality of Saugor. Though the Bhonslas of Nagpur afterwards held sway over the country from 1791 till it was annexed by the British in 1818, the Marāṭhī of those districts is still the Dekhan form of the language. The number of speakers has been returned for the use of this survey as follows :—

Hoshangabad and Makrai	5,500
Narsinghpur	600
Jubbulpore	2,250
Damoh	1,500

By summing up the figures given in the preceding pages we arrive at the following total for the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī.

A. Spoken as a vernacular	6,093,858
B. Spoken abroad—
Bombay Presidency	2,800
Berar	5,250
Central India	81,300
Central Provinces	9,875

POONA.

The specimens received from Poona very closely agree with the grammatical sketch on pp. 30 and 31. Marāṭhī is spoken all over the district, without great dialectical differences, by the bulk of the population. The two specimens which follow have very few peculiarities. The form mī is used in addition to myā as the case of the agent of the personal pronoun of the first person; thus, mī pāp kēlē āhē, by-me sin done is. Transitive verbs add s in the second person singular of the past tense; thus, tvā, or tū, karādū hī dilē-nāhīs, by-thee a-kid even was-not-given-by-thee; mōṭhī jēv-nāval kēlis, a-great feast was-made-by-thee, thou gavest a great feast.

There are no instances of the use of the first person neuter and the third person feminine singular of the present tense. These forms end in tē, tē respectively, in Standard Marāṭhī. Thus, yētē, I (neuter) come; yētē, she comes. The usual forms in the Dekhan are yētō, I (neuter) come; yētī, she comes.

In all other respects the specimens well represent the language of Marāṭhī literature. A list of Standard Words and Phrases will be found below on pp. 395 and ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Narayan Rao tried his best with many representations, but Govinda would not be moved. His mind was only set on learning the medical profession. And in those days there were not sufficient means for studying that science.

He (Narayan Rao) intended to get his only son employed somewhere when he had become educated after learning a little more English. In those days employment was easily got, and when once employed promotion was rapid. But Govinda had only one thing in his head. He intended, without learning any more English, to become an apprentice under a doctor in the neighbourhood and soon to be a medical practitioner himself. Narayan Rao even told him to learn a little more English and he promised him that he would then send him to the newly opened medical college, but in vain. At last having determined to satisfy his son he informed Doctor Damodar Rao of the boy's object and requested him to take him under his care. The doctor promised to do so, and to teach him on condition that when he became able to practise himself, he should not carry on the business in that village.

ELSEWHERE IN THE DEKHAN.

To the north and west of Poona Marāṭhī is spoken as a vernacular by most of the Dekhan Hindus and Musalman Tambōlis in Bombay Town and Island, and further in Thana, Nasik, and Ahmadnagar.

Bombay Town and Island is a meeting-place for all the different Marāṭhī sub-dialects. The real home language is the Marāṭhī dialect of the Central and Northern Konkan. The usual Dekhan form of the language is, however, spoken by about 80,000 people. It has no peculiarities of its own, and need not be illustrated by separate specimens.

The principal language of Thana is the dialect of Marāṭhī which, with slight local variations, is spoken from Daman to Rajapur. It will be dealt with below, under the head of Konkan Standard. The usual Dekhan form of Marāṭhī is spoken by Brahmans and other high castes. The number of speakers has been estimated at 32,000.

The principal language of Nasik is Marāṭhī, shading off into Khāndēśī in the north. This latter language is spoken in the north, on the Khandesh border, where we also find a Bhīl dialect. It has hitherto been classed as a dialect of Marāṭhī. The materials collected for the Linguistic Survey, however, show that it is rather a dialect of Gujarātī, and it will therefore be dealt with in connection with that language. See Vol. ix, Part ii.

No specimens have been received of the Marāṭhī dialect of Nasik. It is, however, almost certain that it does not materially differ from the form which that language assumes in the neighbouring Ahmadnagar. Specimens have been forwarded of two border dialects, spoken in the west of the district. They are the so-called Kōṅkaṇī, which is entirely different from Kōṅkaṇī proper, in the north, and Ṭhāk'ri in the south. The former is a Bhīl dialect, and the latter will be dealt with in connection with the Marāṭhī spoken in the Central and Northern Konkan. See below pp. 109 and ff. It is very probable that the current Marāṭhī of Nasik, especially in the west, has some of the same characteristics. Above the hills, however, the difference between the two forms of speech is so unimportant that no inconvenience can possibly arise from the Nasik dialect being classed under the standard form of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan.

To the south of Nasik lies the district of Ahmadnagar, the principal language of which is Marāṭhī. It is the usual Dekhan form of that language, and it is not necessary to illustrate it further.

Marāṭhī is further spoken all over the Bhore State as the principal language. It is the usual Dekhan form and need not be illustrated by means of a separate specimen. We may only note that t is often added to the second person plural of the past tense of intransitive verbs. Thus, tumhī gēlāt, you went.

In Sholapur the same form of Marāṭhī is the principal language in the north and the west.

Marāṭhī is also the principal language of the northern part of the Akalkot State and of Pili and Kurla of the same State. The language of the rest of the State is Kanarese. No specimens have been received, but there is no reason for assuming that the Marāṭhī of Akalkot differs in any important points from that spoken in Sholapur.

The principal language of the Satara District, as also of the States Phaltan and Audh in the Satara Agency is Marāṭhī with the usual characteristics of the Dekhan. Of the 59,500 speakers in the Phaltan State about 56,000 are stated to be Kuṇ'bis. Their dialect does not, however, differ from that of the rest of the population.

The principal language of Belgaum is Kanarese. In the west of the district the bulk of the population speak Standard Marāṭhī. The figures returned for the different Talukas are as follows :—

Gokak	4,000
Athni	40,000
Chikodi	85,000
Belgaum	82,582
Parasgad	4,000
Khanapur	48,381
TOTAL														.	264,463, or, in round numbers, 265,000.

The dialect of Belgaum closely agrees with that of Satara. The dental and lingual n are confounded. Thus, we find tyā-nē and tyā-nē, by him. The numeral 'one' is written yēk, a state of affairs which is common in many parts of the territory in which Marāṭhī is a vernacular. The conjunctive participle is sometimes slightly irregular. Thus, nighōn, having gone out; yēvun, having come. The verb hōnē, to become, forms the past tense dzāhālā, where Standard has dzhālā. Such discrepancies are, however, not sufficiently important to make it necessary to give any specimen of the dialect.

In Jat and Daphlapur, Marāṭhī is spoken on the north-western border and in a small district half-way between Jat and Karajgi, about Asungi and Jilyal. The dialect closely agrees with that of Satara.

Marāṭhī is also the main language of Kolhapur. The dialect shows all the characteristics of the form of Marāṭhī spoken in Satara. The tendency to pronounce the short a fully seems here to have been carried to an extreme. In other respects the dialect does not differ from that current in neighbouring districts. The only peculiarity is that a ta is added in the second person plural of the past tense. Thus, ma-lā kōkarū suddhā dilē-nāhīta, to-me a-kid even has-not-been-given-by-you; ēka mēdzavānī tumhī dēt āhāta, you have given a feast.

In the Southern Jaghir States Marāṭhī is spoken in the North and East. Specimens have been received from Miraj, Sangli, and Kurundwad. They all exhibit the same form of the language as that current in Satara and neighbouring districts. The second person singular of the past tense of transitive verbs only occasionally adds s. The only other peculiarity which needs be mentioned is the preference shown for the word avaghā, all.

Closely related is also the dialect exhibited in the specimens received from Ramdrug.

As in the neighbouring Belgaum dialect the past tense of the verb hōnē, to become, is dzāhālā and not dzhālā.

As will have appeared from the preceding remarks Marāṭhī is remarkably uniform all over the Dekhan. In order to illustrate the widespread tendency to pronounce the short a fully it will be sufficient to give the first lines of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which has been received from Kolhapur. The tendency has here been carried to the extreme.

Standard Marāṭhī, in the usual Dekhan form, is also spoken to a great extent in Janjira, Kolaba, and Ratnagiri, and it has influenced the speech of the educated classes all over the Konkan. No estimates are, however, available with regard to the proportion of the population in those districts which speak the Dekhan form of the language, and the reported figures have, therefore, been put down as all belonging to the slightly different form which Marāṭhī assumes in the Central Konkan.

Marāṭhī is also the principal language in the north-western portion of the Nizam's territory, which does not fall within the scope of the present Survey.

The Marāṭhī spoken in Berar and the Central Provinces differs in some respects from the form which the language has in the Dekhan, and it will, therefore, be separately dealt with below. The usual Dekhan form is, however, also spoken by a considerable portion of the population in Buldana.

The District of Buldana is the meeting ground between the two forms of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan and in Berar respectively. The west of the district belongs to the former, and the east to the latter.

The first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follow will show that the current dialect of Western Buldana in no important points differs from the usual Dekhan Standard. We may only note the frequent use of va instead of āṇi, and. A list of Standard Words and Phrases which has not been reproduced gives the forms āmu-chē, our; āmhi āhōnt, we are; tumhi āhānt, you are. These do not occur in the specimen.

The dialect of Basim was originally reported to be the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī. An inspection of the specimens forwarded from that district has however shown that they share most of the features characteristic of the Marāṭhī spoken in Berar and the Central Provinces, and they have, accordingly, been transferred to that dialect. It is, on the other hand, probable that some of the educated classes speak the Standard language of the Marāṭhī literature, as is the case in all Marāṭhī speaking districts.

BROKEN DIALECTS OF THE DEKHAN.

Marāṭhī is remarkably uniform throughout the Dekhan. In the south-west we find colonies of Kōṅkaṇī in Belgaum, and, in the Ghats, dialects are spoken which are intermediate between the forms of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan and in the Northern and Central Konkan. These will be dealt with below in connexion with the language of Thana and the Konkan.

In the south and east Marāṭhī borders on Kanarese, and in Bijapur and Dharwar we meet with dialects which have, to a small extent, been influenced by that language. This influence is, however, not very important. The chief result which it has effected is a weakening of the sense of gender, and a confusion between the active and passive constructions of transitive verbs.

The number of Marāṭhī speakers in Bijapur has been estimated at 27,680. Most of these speak ordinary Marāṭhī. A corrupt form is, however, spoken among the rustics, and will be illustrated by means of a specimen.

This dialect mainly agrees with the Standard Marāṭhī of the Dekhan. In some points, however, it has features similar to the Marāṭhī dialects of the Konkan.

Thus we find a for Standard ē; n for ṇ; dropping of aspirates; dropping of v before i, ī, and ē; insertion of y before other vowels, and so on. Compare tata for tēthē, there; kuni for kōṇi, some one; nāi for nāhī, not; irudd for viruddh, against; yīs for vīs, twenty; yēl for vēl, time. Compare also forms such as lyōkān, by the son; tyās-ni, to him; hai, he is, and so on.

It has already been remarked that the genders are liable to be confounded, and that the different constructions of the verbs are not correctly distinguished. Thus, we find samda and samdi jindagī, all property; tyā-chyā mulās mī lai phaṭkē mār'lō āhē, I have beaten his son with many stripes.

All these points are, however, relatively unimportant, and there will be no difficulty in understanding the version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

The current language of Dharwar is Kanarese. According to information collected for the Linguistic Survey there are, however, about 44,000 people in that district who talk Marāṭhī. The educated class, especially those who have been trained in schools and colleges, use the Standard form of that language, while the other classes speak a dialect which shows some traces of Kanarese influence.

The Marāṭhī Kuṇ^abīs in the Dharwar and Kalghatgi Talukas in the west of the district bordering on Kanara are said to speak a dialect called Kuḷvāḍī. The number of speakers has been estimated at 3,000.

A list of Standard Words and Phrases in Kuḷvāḍī has been received from the Commissioner. It shows that the dialect in some points agrees with the form of Marāṭhī current in the Konkan. Thus, we find the present tense of the verb substantive formed as follows :—

Singular 1	hāvu	Plural 1	hāy
2	hās	2	hāy
3	hāy	3	hāt

Similarly we also find forms such as tu mār^atēs, thou strikest; tō mār^atāy, he strikes; tumī mār^atyāsī, you strike; tyānī mār^atyāt, they strike. In the past tense we find forms such as tyān mār^alyān, he struck; tyānī mār^alyānī, they struck, etc.

In the future we may note forms such as tumī mār^aśālī, you will strike; tyānī mār^atyālī, they will strike.

In other respects Kuḷvāḍī does not seem to differ from the usual form of Marāṭhī spoken in the Dekhan.

The Marāṭhī dialect of Dharwar is, in some places, influenced by the neighbouring Kanarese. The pronunciation is said to be broad and rough as in that language. The various genders and the different verbal constructions are sometimes confounded; thus, āp^alā (for āp^alī) sarv jind^agī, all his property; grihasthā-chī (instead of -chyā) gharī, in a citizen's house; tu mēj^avānī dilē, thou gavest a feast; mī pāp kēlō, I did sin, and so on.

The two specimens which follow illustrate this mixed form of Marāṭhī. It will be seen that the discrepancies are not very important.

आता तो जीवंत आहे, गेला होता तो आता मिळाला। सर्वांना हे ऐकून आनन्द झाला ॥

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there were a fox and a vixen. One day they were strolling about and came to the house of a tiger. Said the vixen, 'here and nowhere else I will be delivered of my cubs.' When the fox heard this he said, 'O you hussy, when the tiger comes home in the evening he will devour you and your life will be at an end.' The vixen did not listen to him but entered the house of the tiger. The tiger returned in the evening, and the fox, when he had seen this, said to the vixen, 'why are the children crying.' Answered the vixen, 'they ask me to give them some tiger's flesh.' The fox answered, 'have I not already given you some?' When the vixen heard this she said, 'that has all been consumed.' The tiger heard this and ran away thinking that they would kill him. In due time the children grew up. Then the mother went with them to their own house, and they began to live there. When the tiger saw that they were gone he came back to his own house.

KONKAN STANDARD.

Marāṭhī is the principal language of all the coast districts of the Bombay Presidency, from Daman in the north to Rajapur in the south. The northern part of this territory from Daman to Umbargaon, is divided between Marāṭhī and Gujarātī, and the influence of the latter language is also felt farther south, the vocabulary being, to some extent, Gujarātī. This element is not, however, strong.

In the south Marāṭhī gradually develops into Kōṅkaṇī, the connecting links being Saṅgamēśvarī and Bāṅkōṭī on one side, and Kuḍālī on the other.

The Marāṭhī spoken in the territory defined above is closely related to the language of the Dekhan. In some characteristic points, however, it differs, much in the same way as is the case with the Marāṭhī of Berar and the Central Provinces.

It has already been remarked, and it will be shown below, that the dialects spoken by the Kuṇ^abīs of Poona and the Ṭhākurs of Nasik mainly agree with the Marāṭhī of the Konkan. They will therefore, so far as materials are available, be dealt with in connection with that form of the language.

The Marāṭhī of the Dekhan is the language of the literature and of the Government. Through the gradual spreading of education it more and more influences the dialects of the coast districts, and the specimens received from Kolaba, Janjira, and Ratnagiri, and professing to be written in Saṅgamēśvarī, one of the dialects of the Konkan, have proved to be in the usual language of Marāṭhī literature. Most of them represent the speech of the educated classes, which is more or less influenced by the written language all over the Konkan.

The Portuguese missionaries, to whom we are indebted for a grammar of the dialect as spoken in Salsette, call it the northern dialect of Kōṅkaṇī. Name of the dialect. It is not, however, a dialect of Kōṅkaṇī, but a form of speech intermediary between that dialect and the Standard form of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan. It may conveniently be designated as the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī. This name cannot lead to confusion. It has long been customary to state that Marāṭhī has two main dialects, one belonging to the Konkan, and the other current in the Dekhan. The Konkan Standard corresponds to the former. It must, however, be borne in mind that this dialect is different from Kōṅkaṇī, the language of the Southern Konkan.

The Konkan Standard has been returned under a bewildering mass of different names, partly denoting locality and partly caste or occupation. Sub-dialects. To the former class belong Bāṅkōṭī, Damaṇī, Ghāṭī, Māoli, and Saṅgamēśvarī; to the latter Āg^arī, Bhaṇḍārī, Dhan^agarī, Karhādī, Kiristāv, Kōḷī, Kuṇ^abī, Par^abhī, and Ṭhāk^arī. These so-called dialects will be separately dealt with below. In this place we shall consider them all as one form of speech, with slight local variations.

The Konkan Standard is the principal language of Thana, the Jawhar State, Kolaba, Janjira, and the northern part of Ratnagiri. It is spoken by Area in which spoken. about 2½ million people.

Proceeding from the north the details are as follows.

A dialect called Par^{ab}hī has been returned as spoken by nearly the whole Marāṭhī speaking population of Bombay and Thana as far north as Daman. Par^{ab}hī literally means the language of the Prabhus.

The Prabhus, who are identical with the Kāyasths of Gujarat and Upper India, were professional writers in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, under both the Muhammadan and the Marāṭhā governments. Marāṭhī language and literature are largely indebted to their efforts in recording in prose for the first time the historical events of their period.

The Prabhus are said to have come from Gujarat and Upper India. Their language is everywhere that of their neighbours. Par^{ab}hī has been returned as a separate dialect from Bombay and Thana. It is also called Kāyasthī, and in Bombay the Bombay dialect, while it is known as Damaṇī in the north round Daman.

The number of speakers has been estimated as follows for the use of this survey :—

Jawhar State	51,000
Bombay Town and Island	94,000
TOTAL													.	160,000

The 51,000 speakers in the Jawhar State have been returned as speaking Marāṭhī. No specimens have been forwarded, and the classification is not, therefore, quite certain.

Kōḷis are found in almost every village in Gujarat, the Konkan, and the Dekhan. They are considered to be one of the early tribes, and they usually live by agriculture or fishing. They have often been connected with the Muṇḍā tribes, who are commonly denoted as Kols. The Kōḷis of Thana include many small tribes, and may broadly be sub-divided into three classes: the hill Kōḷis, the Son Kōḷis of the coast, and certain low-castes who are not recognised by the rest. They everywhere speak the dialect of their neighbours.

Kōḷī has been returned as a separate dialect from Bombay, Thana, Kolaba and Janjira. The local estimates of the numbers of speakers are as follows :—

Kolaba	10,186
Janjira	6,000
TOTAL													.	189,186

The native Roman Catholic Christians of Thana are usually called Kiristāv by their Hindu and Musalman neighbours. Among Europeans they are known as Portuguese or Salsette Christians. They have been reported as speaking a separate dialect, called Kiristāv, and their number has been estimated for the purposes of this survey at 25,500.

The Kuṇ^{ab}īs or Kulambis are husbandmen. They are usually divided into three groups, the Talheri or Konkan Kuṇ^{ab}īs, the Marāṭhā or Dekhan Kuṇ^{ab}īs, and the Pāchkaḷīs. They everywhere speak the local language of their district. Thus the Kuṇ^{ab}īs of Khandesh speak a form of Khāndēśī. See Vol. ix, Part ii.

Jinjira	18,000
													368,000
												TOTAL	.	368,000

The Dhan^agars or shepherds have often been reported to speak a dialect of their own. The so-called Dhan^agarī of Chhindwara will be dealt with in connection with the other dialects of that district.

Thana	1,160
Jawbar	20
Janjira	70
Belgaum	500

Kolaba	:	3,813
Janjira	:	4,850

Karhādī is the dialect spoken by the Karhādā Brāhmaṇs in Sawantwadi, Ratnagiri, and Bombay Town and Island. They are supposed to take their name from Karhad in Satara. Estimates of their number are only available from Bombay Town and Island, where they are said to number about 2,000.

Saṅgamēśvarī is the language of Sangameshvar, a town in the Devrukh Taluka of Ratnagiri. The name is, however, often used to denote the Saṅgamēśvarī Konkani Standard of Marāṭhī from Bombay to Rajapur. It is there said to be the language of all Hindus (except Brahmans), of the Jews, the native Christians, and the Kōṅkaṇī Musalmāns called Nawāits.

The figures returned for the purposes of this survey are as follows :—

Kolaba	265,000
Janjira	38,000
Ratnagiri	705,000
TOTAL		1,098,000

To this total must be added 234,800 speakers in the south of Kolaba, who were originally returned as speaking Kōṅkaṇī, but who have since been stated to speak the ordinary Marāṭhī of the district. We thus arrive at an estimated number of 1,332,800 speakers of Saṅgamēśvarī. Compare, however, the remarks on pp. 33 and 122.

The variety of the latter dialect spoken by Muhammadans is usually called Bāṅkōṭī, i.e. properly the dialect of Bankot in the Mandangad Taluka of Ratnagiri. Only 1,787 speakers have been returned from Kolaba, no estimates being available from other districts.

The dialect spoken in the Western Ghats, between Kolaba and the Bhore State, is usually called Ghāṭī. It is probably identical with Māoli, the language of Maval, or the country above the Sahyadris, between Thana and Poona. The latter dialect has only been returned from Bombay Town and Island. The number of speakers has been estimated for the purposes of the Linguistic Survey as follows :—

TOTAL		37,000

All these so-called dialects are closely related. They are merely local forms of the current Marāṭhī of the Konkani. By summing up the figures given in the preceding pages we arrive at the following total for that form of speech :—

Parabhi	160,000
Kiristāv	25,500
Kuṇbī	368,000
Āgri	22,826
Dhanagari	1,750
Bhāṇḍari	8,663
Ṭhākri	25,405
Karhāḍi	2,000
Saṅgamēśvarī	1,332,800
Bāṅkōṭī	1,787
Ghāṭī and Māoli	37,000

GUIMARAENS, FRANCISCO VAS DE,—Declaração novamente feita da muita Dolorosa Morte e Paixão do Nosso Senhor Jesus Christo. Conforme a Escreverão os quatro evangelistas. Lisboa 1659. Reimprimado Bombahim 1845.

Grammatica da lingua Concani no dialecto do Norte, composta no seculo xvii por hum missionario Portuguez; e agora pela primeira vez dada á estampa (por Joachim Heliodoro da Cunha Rivara.) Nova-Goa. Na imprensa nacional. 1858.

Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency. Vol. xiii, Part i. Bombay 1882. Note on the language on pp. 67 and ff.

An a is pronounced in many cases where the language of the Dekhan uses ē. Thus especially in the neuter singular of strong bases, the neuter plural of weak bases, and future of the first conjugation. Thus, sōnā, gold; ḍuk^arā, swine; bōlan, I shall say. ā also corresponds to ē of the Dekhan in several pronominal adverbs, and, occasionally, elsewhere; thus, tavā, there; bhuka-na, by hunger; hōta, they were.

K

Aspirated and unaspirated letters do not seem to differ much in pronunciation, and they are often interchanged. Thus, jīb, tongue; āmī, we; hānūn and ānūn, having brought; lābh^atē and lāb^otē, is found, etc.

The palatals are pronounced as ts, dz, etc., not only in the same cases as in the Dekhan, but also before ē; thus, dzē, who (plural); tyā-tsē sōk^arē, his sons.

Cerebral ḍ and ḍh after vowels become r; thus, ghōrā, a horse; par^alā, he fell; av^arā, so great. D is, however, preserved in the extreme north and in Ratnagiri, and also in the east where the influence of the Dekhan standard is stronger.

Cerebral ṇ becomes n; thus, kōn, who? pan, but. N is often written where the influence of the literary language is strong, and it is probably also often pronounced by the educated. Thus, the Karhādā Brāhmaṇs of Bombay use the cerebral ṇ. In the verb mhaṇ^aṇē, to say, ṇ sometimes becomes ṇg; thus, mhaṇgun, therefore.

Cerebral ḷ becomes l; thus, sag^alā, all; dōlā, an eye. L is, however, often used exactly as is the case with n.

V is very faintly sounded before i, ī and ē; thus we find istū and vistū, fire; īs and vīs, twenty; yēl and vēl, time.

In other respects the pronunciation is mainly the same as in the Dekhan.

Nouns.—The oblique base is, in most cases, formed as in the Dekhan. Bāpus, a father, however, has the oblique form bāpās; thus, bāpās-tsā, of a father. In the same way we often find āis, a mother, unchanged before case suffixes and forming its plural āyās, oblique āyās. The regular forms are, however, also often used. Thus, we find in Saṅgamēśvarī forms such as bāpās, to a father; bāp^asā-kadē, towards (his) father. On the other hand, the oblique form sometimes ends in s, also in other nouns; thus, sōkris-lā, to a daughter; mān^asās-lā, to a man.

Bases ending in ū often change ū to vā in the oblique form; thus, lēk^arū, a child, obl. lēk^arvā. The common form is, however, lēk^arā as in the Dekhan.

The case suffixes are, on the whole, the same as in the Dekhan, but the case of the agent usually ends in n, na, or nī; thus, sōk^aryān, by the son; bābā-na and bāpās-nī, by the father. The last form is originally a plural. An ablative is often formed by adding dzūn, and this form is very often used as the case of the agent; thus, bāpās-dzūn tsāk^arā-lā sāṅgīt^alā, the father said to the servants. The suffix ṣī or śī is also very commonly used to form an ablative or instrumental; thus, tsāk^arān-ṣī ēk, one from the servants. The locative is often formed by adding ān or āt; thus, gharān and gharāt, in the house.

We may finally note that the neuter gender is commonly used as in Kōṇkaṇī to denote young female beings; thus, tsēḍū, a girl (Saṅgamēśvarī). Compare Telugu.

Pronouns.—The personal pronouns are the same as in the Dekhan, subject to the changes mentioned under the head of Pronunciation. Thus, mī, I; āmī, we; tū, thou; tumī, you. The agent case often takes the suffix nī; thus, mī and mī-nī, by me. 'To me' is ma-nā and ma-lā; 'my' is mādzā, māndzā, and also sometimes māhā. The first person plural, when the person addressed is included, is āpun.

Other pronouns are in the main regular. The usual form for 'this' is hō or ō, but also hā and ā. In Saṅgamēśvarī we find hā, this; tā, that; and dzā, which.

Verbs.—The verb substantive is formed from the bases as and hō as in the Dekhan. The base as forms its present tense regularly āsē, I am; āsēs, thou art, etc. The present tense of the base hō is formed irregularly, the vowel ō being changed to ā; thus, singular, 1, hāy; 2, hāy's and hās; 3, hāy; plural, 1, hāv; 2, hā and hāv; 3, hāt and hān, occasionally also hātīn.

The past tense only differs from the usual Dekhan form in the first person singular feminine, which is hōtī, or hōtyē, and not hōtē. The second person plural has sometimes different forms for the three genders; thus, m. hōtēs, fem. hōtyās, n. hōtīs. These forms are, however, probably only used as an honorific singular.

The future is āsan and hōin, I shall be.

The present tense of finite verbs has only one form for all genders. Thus, mī sōditāy, I seek; 2, sōditēs; 3, sōditē; plural, 1, sōditāv; 2, sōditā; 3, sōditāt and sōditān.

In the imperative we may note forms such as dēs, give; ghēs, take.

The past tense of intransitive verbs is formed as in the Dekhan, with the same exceptions as in the case of the verb substantive. Thus, mī gēlō, f. gēlī, n. gēlā, I went.

The past tense of transitive verbs differs from the Marāṭhī of the Dekhan in often agreeing with an inflected object, as is also the case in Kōnkanī and Gujarātī. Thus, tyā-nā tyā-lā paṭhāv'lā, he sent him, where paṭhāv'lā has the form of the nominative masculine. In the third person singular an n is often added, and the form ending in ān is often used both with a masculine and feminine object. Thus, tyā-na miṭī mār'lān, or mār'līn, by him embracing was struck, he embraced.

The perfect and pluperfect are formed as in the Dekhan. Thus, tō gēlāy (i.e., gēlā-hāy), he has gone; tō mēlatā (i.e., mēlā hōtā), he had died. The uncontracted forms never occur in the specimens.

The future of the first conjugation ends in an; thus, mī bōlan, I shall say. The second person singular often ends in śī; thus, mār'śī, thou wilt strike (Karhādī, Bombay, and Kuṇ'bi, Thana); mār'śiv, thou wilt strike (Dhan'gari and Kōlī from Janjira).

In the conjunctive participle śī and śēnī or śānī are often added; thus, uṭhun-śī, having arisen; dzāun-śēnī, having gone.

Other forms are the same as in the Dekhan, and Dekhan forms are very commonly used in addition to the special Konkan forms. More especially, the present tense is formed as in the Dekhan in all dialects of the interior, on the border towards Dekhan.

The vocabulary is to some extent peculiar to the Konkan, and sometimes agrees with Gujarātī as against Standard Marāṭhī. Thus we find in the first specimen sōk'rā, a son; dzak'lā, all; bidzā, other; mērē, near; dzāp'nā, to speak (Sanskrit jalp); māṇḍ'nā, to begin, and so on. Other peculiar words have been collected in the District Gazetteer. See Authorities.

There will, however, be no difficulty on this account in understanding the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It has been received from Bombay Town and professes to illustrate the language of the Kōlīs in Thana and Kolaba. The second specimen is a folktale from the Janjira State, also professing to be written in Kōlī. The third is taken from the old Purāṇ by Vas de Guimaraens. The transliteration has been altered in accordance with the system used for this survey.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain husbandman at the time of his death called all his sons to his death-bed and thus addressed them :—‘ Dear sons, I have nothing to give you except my farm, of which I have made you all joint heirs. Whatever money I had I have buried in the farm, and if you will dig for it you will have it.’ With this he breathed his last. Afterwards his sons went to the farm in the hope of getting the buried treasure. They in this way dug up the whole farm, but did not discover the treasure anywhere. Afterwards they sowed corn in the farm, and as the earth was well turned up, the crops that year were very prosperous and far surpassed those of the preceding years. The sons then said among themselves, ‘ Our father must have told us that his treasure was buried in the field simply in order that we should labour hard in it, and accordingly we have reaped the fruit.’

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

What good will it do us in our want to hear the mass ? On that account God will give us all. Therefore, hear the mass and you will find God.

In one town there lived two friends. One of them always heard the mass, but the other did not care for it. See what happened to him.

Both were wont to go out to hunt. One day they had gone to the wood. See what befell them. When you hear it you will be amazed.

Nine ghaḍis had elapsed since they came to the forest. It was the season of summer. Clouds then began to fly ; lightning, wind, thunder and darkness came on.

Flash after flash blazed with force, and the thunder became mighty. Then a voice was heard from the sky saying, ' Kill, kill quickly him who does not hear the mass.'

That instant the lightning struck him who was not wont to hear the mass. Again there was a flash of lightning, but another mighty voice was heard :—

' Do not kill him who hears the mass. Spare him, because he performs the will of God and obeys it properly.'

The specimens printed above illustrate the chief peculiarities of the Konkani Standard of Marāṭhī. It has already been stated that the language of all the coast districts from Daman to Rajapur is essentially the same, the Western Ghats separating this form of speech from the Marāṭhī of the Dekhan. It will now be necessary to examine all the so-called dialects of the coast districts, in order to show that they are in reality only local forms of the Konkani Standard.

KŌḶĪ.

Two specimens of the so-called Kōḷī dialect have been printed above. The first is a specimen of the dialect as spoken on the coast of Thana and in Kolaba; the second has been received from Janjira.

Two other specimens representing the dialect of various classes of Kōḷīs, have been received from Thana. The first has been taken down among the so-called Machhīmārī, i.e., fisher, Kōḷīs on the coast. The second is in the dialect of the so-called Mahādēv Kōḷīs, a sub-division of the hill Kōḷīs.

The dialect of the Machhīmārī Kōḷīs is, in all essential points, identical with that illustrated in the preceding pages.

There is a very strong tendency towards a nasal pronunciation of vowels, just as is the case in Kōṅkaṇī. Thus we find tō̃ and tō, he; tē̃ and tē, they; hūtā̃, he was.

Ū and ū̃ are often substituted for ō and ō̃; thus, hūtū̃, I was.

L and n are interchangeable. Thus, nāmb, far; nāg'lā, he began.

N is substituted for r in nōḷī, bread; nāg, anger.

There is only one s-sound, the dental s being used instead of the palatal and cerebral ones. Thus, dēs, country; dzāv-sī, having gone. The latter form corresponds to Standard dzāvūn-sī. Compare also dzān instead of dzāin, I shall go.

Note finally forms such as mī, mē, and mē̃, I, by me; tū̃, thou, by thee; hātā̃, they are, etc.

For further details the specimen which follows should be consulted.

The dialect of the Mahādēv Kōlīs is, like other dialects spoken in the eastern part of Thana, more closely related to the Marāṭhī of the Dekhan than is the case on the coast. Thus the cerebral ḍ and the cerebral ḷ are used as in the Dekhan. Compare paḍ^alā, fell; dukāl, famine. The present tense is also formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī mar^atō, I die. Characteristic forms are māhā, my; tuhā, thy; tyāsā, oblique tyāsā, his. The form dōghā-lī, to both, contains a dative suffix lī which corresponds to lē in Khāndēśī. The usual suffix is, however, lā; thus, manukshā-lā, to a man. In most particulars this dialect is the same as that illustrated in the preceding pages, as will be seen from the short specimen which follows.

DIALECT OF THE KŌŃKANĪ MUSALMĀNS OF THANA.

Kōṅkanī Musalmāns are residents of the larger villages of all talukas in Thana, but chiefly of Salsette, Kalyan, and Bhiwndi. No estimates are available regarding their number.

Their dialect contains a considerable amount of Hindōstānī words. Thus, āsmān, heaven; baith, sit; bachyā, a child; mil^akat, property, etc. The masculine and neuter genders are often confounded; compare sag^alā, all. In all essentials, however, it closely agrees with the current language of the district, as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

KIRISTĀV.

The dialect of the native Catholic Christians of Thana is usually called Kiristāv by the Hindūs and Musalmāns. It has adopted some Portuguese words, such as pāy, father; māy, mother; mis, mass; igār, vicar; padrōn, god-father; madrōn, god-mother. Note also the use of the English word istēt, estate. The cerebral ṇ is often written as in the Dekhan; thus, māṇ^asā-tsē, of a man; but also mānus, a man. Note also forms such as bōt^alā, he said; aikat^alā, it was heard, which are not, however, unknown in the other dialects of the district.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show that Kiristāv is nothing else than the usual Marāṭhī of the district. It has not been thought necessary to add an interlinear translation.

KUṆ^aBĪ.

It has already been stated that the Kuṇ^abīs everywhere speak the language of their neighbours. Specimens have been received from Bombay, Thana, Janjira, and Poona. The specimens received from Bombay and Janjira do not call for any remark. They closely agree with the current language of the district. The same is the case with the Thana specimen. The present tense is here, however, formed as in the Dekhan. Thus, mī mār^atō, I strike. The verb substantive is written hāyē, he is, and so on. This is probably only another way of spelling the common form hāy.

The Poona specimen also represents the same form of speech. There are, however, some traces of the influence of the current Marāṭhī of Poona. Thus, ḷ is preserved after vowels, and the cerebral ḷ is of frequent occurrence. Compare ghōḷā, a horse; ḷvālā, an eye. The present tense is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī ḍzātō, I go; tū ḍzātōs, thou goest, and so on. The base of the dialect is, however, clearly of the same kind as the Marāṭhī of the Konkan.

The specimens which follow will be sufficient to show that Kuṇ^abī is not a separate dialect, but merely the usual Konkan Standard, with local variations.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A poor widow had a son. She used to go to the king for husking and grinding corn, and thence she used to bring home husks and such other things. Her son had two cows. There was a tank, and by its bank he used to graze his cows; and his mother used to bring him a loaf of bread to the tank. And the king had put his cow in his charge. Once when the boy was sitting on the bank of the tank eating his bread, he happened to see the union of a she-cobra and an ardala (a kind of serpent). The boy struck the ardala with his stick and in a moment the cobra went down to the nether world. There she approached her father and complained to him that the widow's son had used his stick against her. Then her father ordered other serpents to go and bite the widow's son. Then four of them went where the boy was and encircled him. Then the boy prepared four leaf-cups and milking a cow, took the milk in four cups and emptied them in the jaws of the four serpents. At that time the serpents said to him, 'the serpent king has called you, when you go there the serpent king will ask what his daughter was about. Tell him so, and he will give you much wealth. Then you should say, "I do not want your wealth, but give me your finger ring."' Thereupon the serpent king disfigured the head of his daughter by shaving it in seven places. Then he put her upon an ass shorn of its ears, and taking her all over the town at last sent her into exile.

PAR^aBHĪ.

The dialect of the Prabhus has been returned under different names, such as Par^abhī, Kāyasthī, Damañī, and the Bombay Dialect. The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which will be found below, has come from Daman and illustrates the common dialect of that district.

It will be seen that n, l, and ḍ are used as in the Dekhan. Thus, thōḍḍē disān, in a few days; phār dukāl pad^alā, a great hunger arose. The present tense is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī mār^atō or mār^atāv, I strike. The same is the case with the future in the first conjugation. Thus, mī sāṅgēn, I shall say.

In most particulars, however, the dialect of Daman agrees with that spoken in the south of Thana.

The dialect is said to use a great proportion of Gujarātī words, especially in the orth. The specimen is, however, relatively free from such admixture. Note the form dilhī, was given. Compare Gujarātī dikhī and old Marāṭhī didhī.

ĀG^aRĪ.

Āg^arī has only been returned as a separate dialect from Kolaba. It is said to have differed much from Standard Marāṭhī in former times. The short specimen which follows will show that it is in reality the common Konkani Standard of the language. We may only note that the cerebral ḷ is often written as in the Dekhan, and that several Dekhan forms also occur in the specimen. Thus, sag^aḷā, all; but dukāl, famine; mar^atō, I die, etc.

DHAN^gGARĪ.

As has already been stated Dhan^ggarī, or the language of the shepherds, has been returned as a separate dialect from Thana, the Jawhar State, Janjira, and Belgaum.

In Thana the Dhan^ggars are chiefly found in the Murbad Taluka. In Janjira they are said to have come from the Dekhan and the Karnatik. They are not very numerous, and most of them are found in Mhasla. In Belgaum Dhan^ggarī has been returned from the south-east corner, on the frontier towards Sawantwadi.

No specimens have been received from Jawhar. The Dhan^ggarī of Thana has preserved the cerebral ḍ after vowels, and also the cerebral ḷ; thus, thōḍā, small; sag^ḷā, all. The present tense is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī mar^{tō}, I die; tū dētōs, thou givest. In most respects, however, the Dhan^ggarī of Thana agrees with the current language of the district. Note the frequent insertion of a y before vowels; thus, vyāḷā, share; tyō, that, etc.

The dialect of the Dhan^ggars of Janjira has a similar character. It mainly agrees with the Konkani Standard of Marāṭhī. Thus, the past tense of transitive verbs agrees with an inflected object; we find the third person singular of the past tense in ān, and so on. Compare dhanyān ma-lā (fem.) lāv^llī, the master applied me; bā-na sāṅgīt^llān, the father said. On the other hand, ḍ is used after vowels, and the present tense is formed as in the Dekhan. Thus, ghōḍā, a horse; mī khātō, I eat; tū khātōs, thou eatest; tō mhāṅg^{tō}, he says; tī mhan^{tē}, she says.

In Belgaum, where Dhan^ggarī has been returned from the south-east corner on the frontier towards Sawantwadi, the dialect is also closely related to the usual Marāṭhī of the Konkani. ḍ, ḷ, and usually also ṇ are, however, used as in the Dekhan; thus, ghōḍa, a horse; ḍōḷ, an eye; āṇi, and.

Characteristic of the dialect is a tendency to drop final vowels; thus, sōn, for sōnā, gold; ghōḍ and ghōḍa, a horse; vāsar, for vās^{rā}, calves; tud^z nāv, thy name, and so on.

In other respects we find the usual Konkani peculiarities. Compare forms such as yāk and yōk, one; dyōn, two; īs, twenty; hā, I am; hās, thou art; hā, he is; hāv, we are, etc.

The present tense is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī myār^{tō}, I strike.

The short specimens which follow will show that Dhan^ggarī is no separate dialect. Like all eastern dialects of the Konkani it in some characteristics agrees with the Marāṭhī of the Dekhan, but is, on the whole, only the current Konkani Standard. It must be borne in mind that the south-eastern part of Belgaum belongs linguistically rather to the Konkani than to the Dekhan.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A Brāhmaṇ pilgrim was going to Kāśi when a tiger was caught in a trap.

Then the tiger said to the Brāhmaṇ 'release me from the trap and then you will perform your pilgrimage to Kāśi successfully.' The Brāhmaṇ was moved with pity and released the tiger from the trap. Then the tiger said, 'I shall now eat you.' Then the Brāhmaṇ argued, 'a short time before, you said that you would not eat me, and how is it that you are prepared to eat me now? Let us go to the she-buffalo for decision.' Accordingly they went there, and the Brāhmaṇ asked the she-buffalo to decide their dispute. The Brāhmaṇ said, 'I released this tiger from the trap and now he says he will devour me.' Then the buffalo said to the Brāhmaṇ, 'my master took care of me when I was strong and was giving him milk; but now I am grown old, and so my master has made me graze upon the rough grass. Then what room is left for justice here?' The tiger said, 'well Brāhmaṇ, the decision is given. Now I devour you.' Then the Brāhmaṇ said helplessly, 'devour.' Presently the Brāhmaṇ chanced to see a jackal and called to him loudly and the jackal stopped, saying, 'say what you have to say keeping at a distance.' Then the Brāhmaṇ told him his story. The jackal said, 'take me to the place where the tiger was entrapped, and then I will give my decision.' After this the tiger, the Brāhmaṇ, and the jackal all three went there. Then the jackal said, 'let me see how the tiger was entrapped.' The tiger, in order to show that, put himself in the trap, and when he was caught in it, the jackal said to the Brāhmaṇ, 'now go your way to Kāśi.' Immediately the Brāhmaṇ set off. And the jackal fed upon the tiger.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I had something to do from morning till night. As soon as I got up in the morning the young buffaloes were let loose. Then a she-buffalo had a miscarriage. Therefore two servants were sent for medicine. I mixed two or three different drugs and administered the mixture to the she-buffalo. Then I had to churn buttermilk, and then I had something to eat. Then I called seven or eight neighbours and set them to work. Then I ate some bread and went to look after the cattle. I saw that the she-buffalo was much exhausted. I feared lest she might be dying and therefore went to Durga to fetch some medicine, and thereafter I went to Madkopa and Nagurda. I came home with the medicine about three o'clock at night, mixed the medicine, and gave it to the she-buffalo. Then I ate a piece of bread and went to sleep for a moment. When two hours were left of the night I let the cattle loose. Then I brought the young buffaloes to the house and let them loose. Then I took some bread in my hand and quickly went to Tirthakund and thence to the court.

BHAṆḌĀRĪ.

Bhaṇḍārī is the dialect of the Bhaṇḍārīs, or palm-juice drawers. It has been reported as a separate dialect from Kolaba and Janjira. It is nothing but the current language of the districts. The cerebral ḍ is usually written as in the Dekhan; thus, paḍ^ṛlā, fell. It is, however, often changed to r after vowels, as is usually the case in the Northern Konkan; thus, tud^ṛā sabda mī kadī-bī mōr^ṛlā nāy, thy word by-me at-any-time-even was-broken not. The writing of ḍ in such cases is, therefore, probably due to the influence of the written language.

A specimen of Bhaṇḍārī has also been forwarded from Ratnagiri. Like the specimens of Saṅgamēśvarī received from the same district, it is written in the usual Marāṭhī of the Dekhan, and it has not, therefore, been reproduced.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the Bhaṇḍārī of Janjira will be sufficient to show that this form of speech differs in no essential points from the usual Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī.

ṬHĀK[^]RĪ.

Ṭhāk[^]rī has been reported as a separate dialect from Kolaba and Nasik, and specimens have also been received from Thana. The speakers are everywhere found in the neighbourhood of the Dekhan, and their dialect is, accordingly, a kind of connecting link between the two slightly differing forms of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan and the Konkan respectively. The dialect of the Ṭhākurs of Kolaba has, like the other forms of speech in that district, been largely influenced by the form of Marāṭhī current in the Dekhan. Thus, cerebral ḷ and ṇ are usually distinguished from the corresponding dental sounds, and ḷ has been preserved after vowels. Compare words such as dukāl, famine; māṇ[^]sā-lā, to a man; paḍ[^]lā, he fell. The pronunciation of ṇ is, however, probably that of a dental n, for we find both ṇ and n constantly written in the same words, and there are sufficient other traces to show that the dialect is only an adulterated form of the common language of the Central and Northern Konkan. A few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be sufficient to illustrate this form of speech.

The Thāk'rī dialect of Nasik is also closely related to the current Marāṭhī of the Dekhan. Thus, the cerebral ḍ and ḷ are both retained; compare ghōḍā, a horse; paḷ, run. The cerebral ṇ is occasionally changed to n; thus, pānī, water. Usually, however, we find forms such as kōṇ, who? The inflection of verbs is the same as in the Dekhan. On the other hand, we find characteristic Konkan forms, such as istav, fire; yēḷ, time; tyā-na, by him; ḍuk'ra, swine; asan, I shall be; jyēlā, he went. In tī ḍuk'ra khāt hōtē, those swine were eating, the verb hōtē has the form of the masculine plural, though the subject is neuter. This is probably due to the influence of the neighbouring Gujarātī.

On the whole, the Thāk'rī of Nasik shares the characteristic features of other border dialects between the Dekhan and the Konkan, as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows:—

In Thana, Thākurs are chiefly found in the hilly country in the south-east and south. Their dialect is of the kind usual in all districts between the Konkan and the Dekhan. There is, besides, a slight admixture of Gujarātī. Compare forms such as dēi-dzō, give; bhuka, with hunger; ākhōn, at last. The termination of the dative is usually l; thus, ābbāl, to the father; māl, to me; tyādzhal, to him. The case of the agent of personal pronouns ends in hān; thus, mahān, by me; tuhān, by thee. Compare the dialectical forms mahā, my; tuhā, thy. Note the use of the particle kari, how? why? which corresponds to ki nāi, why not? namely, in colloquial Marāṭhī.

The general agreement of the dialect with other forms of speech current in the same localities will be seen from a perusal of the short specimen which follows.

KARHĀDĪ.

Karhāḍī is the language of the Karhāḍā Brāhmaṇs. Their name is said to be derived from Karhad in Satara, and their original country is said to stretch along the Krishna, from its meeting with the Koyna on the north to the Varna on the south. They are now found in small numbers all over Ratnagiri and Sawantwadi, and also in Bombay Town and Island.

A specimen of Karhāḍī has been forwarded from Bombay. It shows that the dialect is closely connected with the form of speech current in the Central and Northern Konkan. In some points, however, it agrees with the Marāṭhī spoken in Satara. Cerebral ṇ and cerebral ḷ are distinguished from the corresponding dental sounds; ḷ is not changed to r after vowels; and the present tense of finite verbs is formed as in the Dekhan. Thus, mhaṇālā, he said; dukaḷ, famine; ghōḷā, a horse; tũ māṛtōs, thou strikest, and so on.

It is possible that Karhāḍī was originally a dialect of the Marāṭhī spoken in Satara. At the present day, however, it belongs to the Konkan group. We find characteristic Konkan forms such as bāpus, oblique bāpāśi, a father; āus, a mother; tsēḷũ, oblique tsēḷvā, a daughter. The verb substantive is hāy, I am; hās, thou art; hāy, he is, and so on. Note also the substitution of the class nasal for the Anunāsika in forms such as tēntlā, among them; and the use of the cerebral ṇ in forms such as tē-ṇā, by him.

One of the forms of the dative is characteristic of the dialect, the final s having developed to a visarga; thus, māṇ^ssāh, to a man. Besides, we also find forms such as āp^sṇās, to himself; tēs, to him, etc.

The general agreement with the other dialects of the neighbourhood will easily be seen from the specimen which follows.

GHĀṬĪ.

Ghāṭī is the dialect spoken in the Western Ghats between Kolaba and the Bhor State. Like other dialects in the territory bordering on the Dekhan, it shares some of the characteristics of the Marāṭhī of that area. Thus, the cerebral ḍ is preserved after vowels, and the cerebral ḷ is not always changed to l; compare ghōḍā, a horse; ḍōḷā, an eye. The present tense of finite verbs has the same form as in the Dekhan. Thus, mī ḍḍātō, I go; tū ḍḍātōs, thou goest.

The verb substantive forms its present tense as in the Konkan; thus, singular, 1, hāy; 2, hais; 3, hāy; plural, 1, hāū; 2, hāy'sā; 3, hāy'ti. The form hāy'sā is peculiar, and no instances of its use are available. The verb substantive is probably also contained in forms such as ḍḍātōyā, he goes; dyētōyās, thou art giving; kēlāyā, it is done, etc.

In most respects, however, the short specimen which follows will show that Ghāṭī is simply a form of the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī.

SAṄGAMĒŚVARĪ.

Saṅgamēśvarī is the language of Sangameshvar, in the Devrukh Taluka of Ratnagiri. It has already been stated that the name is often used to denote the current language from Bombay to Rajapur, where it meets with Kuḍālī, the northernmost dialect of Kōṅkaṇī.

Specimens of Saṅgamēśvarī have been received from Ratnagiri, Janjira, Kolaba, and Bombay. The specimens forwarded from Ratnagiri, Janjira, and Kolaba, and professing to be written in Saṅgamēśvarī, have proved to be ordinary specimens of the common Marāṭhī of the Dekhan, and this latter form of speech seems to be used by the educated classes. The specimens received from Kolaba, however, contain occasional slips, which show that some form of the Konkan Standard must be current in that district. Thus, we find pāṇī sir^alā, the water entered, where sir^alā is the Konkan form corresponding to śir^alē in the Dekhan.

It is not, however, possible to decide how many of the inhabitants of Ratnagiri, Janjira, and Kolaba speak the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī, and the estimates of the numbers of speakers forwarded for the use of this survey have, therefore, been put down as they have been received. See above pp. 33 and 64.

For our knowledge of Saṅgamēśvarī we are thus reduced to the specimen received from Bombay Town, which has been printed below. It represents a form of speech which is, in all essentials, the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī. In some details, however, it agrees with the dialects spoken to the south of Rajapur.

E and o are apparently both long and short, as is the case in Kōṅkaṇī. The short pronunciation must be inferred from writings such as dikīl, for dēkīl, even ; hutā, for hōtā, was.

Cerebral ḍ after vowels remains, as is also the case in Kōṅkaṇī ; thus, ghōḍā, a horse.

The nominative singular masculine of demonstrative and relative pronouns ends in ā ; thus, hā, this ; tā, that ; ḍzā, who.

The verb substantive forms its present as follows,—singular, 1, hāy ; 2, hāy^as ; 3, hāy ; plural, 1, hāv, 2, hāv ; 3, hāit. Similarly the present tense of finite verbs is mī mār^atā~, I strike ; 2, mār^atāy^as ; 3, mār^atāy ; plural, 1, mār^atāv ; 2, mār^atāv ; 3, mār^atāy^at, and mār^atāt.

In these forms, as in all other essential points, Saṅgamēśvarī closely agrees with the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī, as will be seen from the specimen which follows.

BĀNKŌṬĪ.

The variety of Saṅgamēśvarī spoken by Muhammadans is usually called Bānkōṭī, i.e., strictly speaking, the dialect of Bankot, in the Mandangad Taluka of Ratnagiri. It closely agrees with Saṅgamēśvarī. The pronouns 'that' and 'who' are, however, tō and dzō, respectively, and the present tense of finite verbs is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mā mār^atō, I strike.

The Hindōstānī suffix vālā is used to form nouns of agency; thus, sēt^avālā, a cultivator; dukān^avālā, a shopkeeper.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show the general character of the dialect.

BROKEN DIALECTS OF THANA AND THE KONKAN.

The various forms of speech dealt with in the preceding pages represent one and the same main dialect, with slight local variations. There are, besides, a few dialects spoken in Thana and neighbourhood which are of a more mixed nature.

To these belong Kātkarī or Kāthōḍī, which is originally a Bhil dialect closely related to Khāndēśī, but has now been so much influenced by Marāṭhī that it can conveniently be classed as a dialect of that form of speech.

Another dialect of a similar kind is Vārli. The Vārli, as also the Kātkarī, are said to be more like the Bhils than the Kōlis. Their dialect is still more influenced by Marāṭhī than Kātkarī.

Lastly there are three small dialects in Thana, viz., Vāḍval, Phudgī, and Sāmvedī, which still have preserved many of the characteristic features of Gujarātī Bhili.

KĀTHŌḌĪ OR KĀTKARĪ.

The Kātkarī are a forest tribe inhabiting the mountain fastnesses in the Konkan and the Sahyadri Hills. Their name is usually derived from kath, catechu, which they extract from the terra japonica, or khair tree. Their dialect is sometimes called Kātkarī and sometimes Kāthōḍī or Kātvadī. The numbers of speakers which have been returned for the use of the Linguistic Survey are as follows,—

Janjira State	700
TOTAL	76,700

No specimens have been received from Khandesh and Jawhar. The dialect spoken in Thana, Janjira, and Kolaba is not everywhere the same. The base is, however, identical throughout, and Kāthōḍī must be derived from a form of speech closely related to Khāndēśī. The influence of the surrounding Marāṭhī dialects has, on the other hand, been so strong that the speech of the Kātkarī all over the Konkan now looks like a form of Marāṭhī. Their dialect is, accordingly, no more pure.

The suffix of the genitive is nā; thus, bāhās-nā, of a father. Here the oblique form bāhās corresponds to bāpās in the Marāṭhī of the Konkan, while the suffix agrees with Khāndēśī and Gujarātī. The Marāṭhī form in tsā is also used; thus, mājyā bā-chyā tsākārā-lā, to the servants of my father. Similarly we find gharā-mā and gharāt, in the house; sōhārā and sōhārē, sons; mā-nā, my; tu-nā, thy; and tujhyā samōr, before thee; tō, that, and yē(ghōḍā), this (horse).

The verb substantive forms its present tense as follows,—

Singular, 1, āhā; 2, āhās; 3, āhā; plural, 1, āhāv; 2, āhā; 3, āhāt and āhāt. The past tense is 1, hat(ā); 2, hatā(s); 3, hatā; plural, 1, hatāv; 2, hatā; 3, hatāt or hutāt. Another base hī occurs in forms such as hīnā, he was; hīnāt, they were; hī-hīna and hīn, having been. Besides, we often meet with Marāṭhī forms such as hōtā, he was.

The verb substantive is very commonly added to the base or the present participle in order to form a periphrastic present; thus, mā dṣāhā, or dṣātā-hā, I go; mā marā-hā, I die; tē khapahant, they work. This seems to be the regular present tense. Other forms are kūhas, thou beatest; rahas, thou livest, he lives; yēha and yēhē, he comes, vāṭēha, it appears. Compare Khāndēśī maras, present singular of mar-na, to die.

The past tense is formed as in Khāndēśī; thus, gyā, he went; ānā, he came; rah^anā, and rah^anā-hā, he lived; aḍ^atsan paḍ-nī, difficulty arose; yē kōnā-pasūn ikaṭ lidās, from whom did you buy this? mā pāp karā-hā, I have sinned. The subject is, as the last instance shows, often put in the nominative when the verb agrees with the object.

Instances of the conjunctive participle are khāi-nā, having eaten; vāṭīhīn, having divided; ihīn, having come; māl^amatā sōpī ṭākī, the property having squandered was thrown, the property was squandered away.

The specimens which follow will show that the appearance of Kāthōḍi is now, to a great extent, that of a Marāṭhī dialect, but that the originally different character is still easily recognised.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

THE TRAVELLERS AND THE BEAR.

Two friends were travelling together on the same road when they were met by a bear. The one in great fear climbed a tree and hid himself among the branches, thinking only of himself. The other seeing that he had no chance single-handed against the bear, threw himself on the ground and feigned to be dead. He did this because he had heard that the bear will never touch a dead body. As he thus lay, the bear came up to his head, smelling and sniffing at his nose and ears and heart, but the man immovably held his breath; and the beast supposing him to be dead walked away. When the bear was fairly out of sight, the other man came down out of the tree and asked what it was that the bear had whispered to him, for, said he, 'I observed he put his mouth very close to your ear.' 'Well,' replied his companion, 'it was no great secret; he only bade me never again keep company with those who, when any danger threatens, look after their own safety, and leave their friends in the lurch.'

VĀRLĪ.

The Vārlis are one of the early tribes in Thana where they are estimated at 89,000 individuals. Their head-quarters are in the north-west in Dahanu, where they form more than half of the population. They are also found in Mokhada, Murbad, Kalyan, Karjat, and in the Jawhar State. Three thousand Vārlis have been returned from Khandesh, where they inhabit the Satpura Range. No specimens have, however, been obtained from this latter locality. The Vārlis of the Dangs speak a Bhil dialect, founded on Gujarātī.

The Vārlis of Thana are also Bhils, and their language must originally have been of the same kind as other Bhil dialects and Khāndēśī. In the course of time it has, however, been so largely influenced by Marāṭhī, that it must now be classed as a dialect of that language, except in the extreme north, where it is stated to be a form of Gujarātī.

According to the District Gazetteer the Vārlis have a tendency to shorten the words, and say for instance kōṭ dās, instead of kōṭhē dātōs, where are you going? Moreover, they use some peculiar words such as nāng-nē, to see. The specimen received from Thana corroborates these statements. Nāng, see; nāngūn, having seen, occur, and an instance of the so-called shortening of words is vichār, he asked, for which the fuller Marāṭhī form is vichārālā.

The language of the specimen is a mixed form of speech. In most respects it agrees with the current language of Thana. Other characteristics it shares with the Marāṭhī of Poona, and, lastly, there is an admixture of Gujarātī.

A is used as in the dialects of the Northern Konkan in many cases where Standard Marāṭhī has ē; thus, tatha, there; paḍālā, it fell; ḍuk^ara, swine; sāṅgan, I shall say.

The Anunāsika is often dropped, and often also added where it seems to be incorrect. Thus, tyāt-sī, from among them; tēnhā, by him; dēvā-tsē, and dēvā-chyā, gharā, in God's house; āhā, āha, and āhē, is.

The aspirates are sometimes irregularly used; thus, asāmī-na davadālā, the man sent him; maṅgh, afterwards; dilhā and dilā, given; tēnhā and tyān, by him.

In the inflection of nouns we find typical Konkan forms such as bās-lā, to a father; bhās, a brother; ḍuk^ara, swine, etc.

On the other hand, n, l, and ḍ are used as in the Dekhan. Thus, mān^asā-lā, to a man; dukāl, famine; paḍālā, he fell. In milat, meeting, however, l is substituted for ḍ as in the Northern Konkan.

The Gujarātī element is chiefly seen in the vocabulary. Compare bijā, another; pōtē, by himself; tyā-nē, his; marēl, dead; ḍzarā, a little, and so forth.

The mixed nature of the dialect will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

VĀḌAVAL.

The Vāḍvals are one of the sub-tribes of the Pāchkaḷṣī Kuṇbis. They are returned to the number of 3,500 from Thana, where they are found in the coast talukas of Bassein, Mahim, and Dahanu. Like the rest of the Pāchkaḷṣī they are supposed to have immigrated from Gujarat.

Their dialect is most intimately connected with the usual Marāṭhī of the Central and Northern Konkan. The cerebral ḍ is not, however, changed to r after vowels; thus, ghōḍā, a horse. The cerebral ṇ is often written, but seems to be pronounced as a dental, n being often written instead; thus, pāṇī, water; but kōṇī, anyone. The cerebral ḷ is used as in the Dekhan; thus, dōḷā, an eye; miḷḷā, he was found.

The peculiar appearance of the dialect is due to some phonetical changes which Vāḍval shares with several Bhil dialects. The most important ones are as follows:—

Ch becomes s or ś; thus, sākar, a servant; sānd, moon; śār, four.

S and ś become h, i.e., probably the sound of ch in 'loch.' Thus, hōna, gold; bah, sit; hāngatla, it was said; hēt, field; hēmbār, hundred. The s of the genitive suffix sā usually becomes h and is often dropped altogether; thus, bābā-hā, bābā-yā and bābā-ā, of the father; tyā gāvśā dukān-dārā-hyā mērsan, from a shopkeeper in the village. Compare the Bhil dialects of Chhota Udepur, etc.

H is regularly dropped; thus, āth, a hand; āy, he is. Forms such as hāy, he is; hōtā, he was, are, however, also met with, and h is perhaps in reality a feeble h-sound, a kind of spiritus lenis.

Ordinary Marāṭhī forms occasionally also occur; thus, sāt, seven; vīs, twenty; pannās, fifty.

Most of the common characteristics of the current language of Thana occur in this dialect. Thus we find a in many places where the dialects of the Dekhan have ē; compare dila, it was given; lāgla, they began.

The Anunāsika is usually dropped; thus, barī māhṇa, good men; tyāt-na, from among them.

The case of the agent usually ends in n; thus, bābān, by the father; tyān, by him; mīn and mīna, by me.

The genitives of the personal pronouns are māā, māyā, māy, my; tuā, tuvā, thy; ām-sā, our; tum-sā, your.

The verb substantive is hāy, or āy in all persons of the singular; the plural forms are 1, (h)āt, 2, āhā, āt, 3, (h)āt. The past tense is 1, (h)ōtāv, ōtā, 2, hōtā, 3, hōtā; plural, hōtē.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as in the neighbouring dialects; thus, mār^atāy, I strike; 2, mār^atē, 3, mār^atē, plural 1, mār^atāv, 2, mār^atā, 3, mār^atāt. 'You go' is tumī dṣā.

The past tense is regularly formed; thus, gēlāv or gēlā, I went, 2, gēlā, 3, gēlā; plural 1, gēlāv, 2, gēlē, 3, gēlē.

Perfect and pluperfect are formed from the past by adding the verb substantive; thus, ālāy, he has come; gēl^atāv, I have gone; mēl^atā, he had died. A curious form is paḍ^alōā, he was lost.

Future forms are ahēn, I shall be; sāllān, I shall go; hāngēn, I shall say; mārihīl, thou wilt strike, etc.

Some forms and words are Gujarātī and not Marāṭhī; thus, sā, i.e. chha, six; mērē, near; pōtē-hī (bāy^akō), one's own (woman), wife; bhukē, with hunger; pōṭ bharāvō, the belly should be filled; tyāt-na, from among them, etc.

The mixed character of the dialect will be seen from the short specimen which follows.

PHUḌ^aGĪ.

This is the dialect of a wandering tribe in Thana, and has been returned as spoken by 1,000 individuals.

A list of Standard Words and Phrases in Phuḍ^agī has been received from Thana, and it shows that the dialect is almost identical with Vāḍ^avaḷ. Compare ghōḍā, a horse; pāṇī and pānī, water; sākar, a servant; śār, four; hōna, gold; sāt, seven; vīs, twenty, etc.

The inflection of nouns and pronouns is the same as in Vāḍ^avaḷ; thus, tuyā bābā-hyā gharāt kav^aḍē-ra pōr hāt, how many sons are there in your father's house? tum-sā, your, etc.

The conjugation of verbs is also mainly the same, and the difference between the two forms of speech must, to say the least, be unimportant. Our materials are, however, not sufficient to decide whether Vāḍ^avaḷ and Phuḍ^agī are absolutely identical, and it is therefore safer to separate them.

SĀMVĒDĪ.

The Sāmvedīs live as husbandmen and gardeners in Bassein and Mahim. Their number is estimated at 2,700.

They speak a mixed dialect, the chief components of which are the current Marāṭhī of Thana and vulgar Gujarātī.

Ch has become s and h; thus, sākar, a servant; nās^atyāt, they dance; āḍ^ahan, difficulty. The suffix of the genitive is hō, hā or ā; thus, bāpā-hā, of a father; rāṇḍā-ā, of prostitutes.

S becomes h; thus, dihāt, in a day; hōk^arō, a son; hēt, a field. Ṇs becomes hṇ and rs hr; thus, māhṇā-dō, to a man; vahrē, years.

Lil becomes il; thus, bōilō, he said; ghāilī, she was put.

Other phonetical changes are also shared by the neighbouring dialects.

Strong masculine bases form their nominative as in Gujarātī and Kōṇkaṇī; thus, hōk^arō, a son; vāṭō, a share. The corresponding feminine plural also ends in ō; thus, rōṭhyō, breads. The instrumental ends in ē, hē, and dē; thus, nirbhayē, without fear; ānandā-hē, with joy; bhukē-dē, with hunger.

The dative ends in dō; thus, māh^aṇā-dō, to a man. The usual Marāṭhī postpositions lā and tē (usually dē), also occur; thus, bāpā-lā, and bāpā-tē, to the father; sāk^arā-dē, to the servants.

The inflection of verbs mainly agrees with the Marāṭhī of Thana; thus, hā, thou art; hāy, he is; hāt, they are; mar^atē, I die; vāṭ^atē, it appears. The third person masculine of the past tense usually ends in ō; thus, bōilō, he said; gēlō, he went. We find, however, also forms such as gēlā, he went; dhāḍ^alā, he was sent. The pluperfect is formed by adding the abbreviated verb substantive to the weak form of the past participle; thus, mēl-tō, he had died.

On the whole the Sāmvedī dialect must be characterised as a mechanical mixture of Konkan Marāṭhī and Gujarātī, as will appear from the specimen which follows.

In the north of Thana Marāṭhī is gradually superseded by Gujarātī. The minor caste dialects are often of a more or less mixed appearance, but it would be waste of time and paper to give specimens of all of them. It may, however, be of interest to print one, and the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the dialect spoken by the Māngēlās will therefore be subjoined.

The Māngēlās are a tribe of fishermen in Thana. The greatest numbers have been returned from Mahim, Bassein and Dahanu. The total number of Māngēlās returned at the Census of 1901 were 11,538. The dialect of the Māngēlās is, however, probably nowhere different from that of the district where they live, and it has not been separately returned.

The specimen printed below has been forwarded from Bhiwndi. It will be seen that it is a dialect of the same kind as Vāḍvaḷ, Sāmvēdī, etc., with a strong admixture of Gujarātī. The palatals have been transliterated as ch, j, and so on. It is, however, possible that they are in reality pronounced as in Marāṭhī.

MĀHĀRĪ.

The Mahārs are found all over the Bombay Presidency. Like their namesakes in the Central Provinces, they speak the dialect of their neighbourhood. Compare pp. 300 and ff.; and 351 and ff. Specimens of their language have been forwarded from Thana. According to the District Gazetteer it is ordinary Marāṭhī, with some strange words, and, especially in the north, with a curious accent.

At the last Census of 1901, 44,039 Mahārs were enumerated in Thana. They are also known under other names, such as Dhēḍ Holia, and Parvārī. They claim to be village servants, and in many villages are authorities in the matter of boundaries, carry Government treasure, escort travellers, and take away dead animals. Some of them are husbandmen, and others gather wood, cut grass, and make brooms and coir slings, and so forth. A considerable number find employment in Bombay as street sweepers and carriers, and a good many take service in the Bombay army.

The local belief is that the Thana Mahārs were brought from the Dekhan by the Marāṭhās to help the Dēśmukhs and the Dēśpāṇḍyās to collect the revenue.

The Māhārī version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son printed below shows that the dialect in all essential points agrees with the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī.

Ē and ō are commonly written yā and vā, respectively. Thus, tyā, Standard tē, that; ghvārā, horse; ghōrē, horses. Instead of yā we also find ya and yō; thus, yak and yōk, one. Final ē commonly becomes a; thus, bhuka-na, Standard bhukē-nē, with hunger. The instances just given show that the Anunāsika is commonly dropped.

A apparently has a broad sound. Compare ānōnd, happiness; harōs, joy, etc.

There is no cerebral n, ḍ, or ḷ. Compare pānī, water; ghvārā, horse; ḍvālā, eye.

Ṭs is often substituted for s; thus, hṭṭsā, share; duṭskōl, famine.

V is dropped before i as usual; thus, īs, twenty; istō, fire.

Note the tendency to aspiration in words like hāt, eight; nhav, nine; dhāt, tooth, and so forth.

Forms such as jyēlā and gyālā, went; jhyēt'la and ghyātla, took, are well known from other neighbouring dialects.

The inflexional system is mainly regular. The neuter gender is on the road to disappearance, it being often replaced by the masculine.

With regard to nouns we may note the oblique base ending in s in forms such as tuhyā bāpus-lā, to thy father. Note also forms such as sātān, in the field.

The inflexion of pronouns shows the same peculiarities as in the case of other neighbouring dialects. Compare mahā, māḍzhā and māḍzā, my; tyāhā and tyāṭsā, his; hāmī, we; tumī and tumhī, you. Note also manā, to me; miyā and mīhā, by me; tuyā and tunhā, by thee, and so forth.

The present tense of the verb substantive is inflected as follows:—

Sing. 1	hāyē	Plur. 1	hāvō
2	hāyēs, hāyas	2	hā
3	hāyē, hāy	3	hāyēt, hāyētī.

Other verbal forms are regular. Compare ālāy, he has come; ḍzāin, I shall go; mhanan, I shall say.

Note sāngla, said; tsārāyāsnī, in order to tend; mhaṅgāy-lā, to be called; vātun-ṣani, having divided, and so forth.

For further details the student is referred to the specimen which follows.

KŌŊKAŊĪ.

KŌŊkaŋī is the language of the Konkan to the south of Rajapur. The number of speakers may be roughly estimated at about 1,500,000 people.

The name KŌŊkaŋī seems to be of a relatively recent date. The authors who first mentioned the language describe it as lingua bramanica, lingua Canarim or Canarina, lingua bramana Goana, and so forth. KŌŊkaŋī means the language of the Konkan, i.e., the strip of country between the Ghats and the sea, and it might therefore also be used to connote the language of the country to the north of Rajapur. This has sometimes been the case,—in Mr. Beames' Comparative Grammar, for instance; and the common statement that there are two main dialects of Marāṭhī, Dakhaŋī and KŌŊkaŋī, is partly based on this wider use of the word. The dialects spoken in the northern Konkan are, however, closely related to Standard Marāṭhī. The dialects of the northern part of Ratnagiri gradually lead from this form of speech to the language of the Southern Konkan, and the name KŌŊkaŋī should be reserved for this latter form. It is pronounced Kōŋkaŋī and Kōŋkŋī in the north, and Koŋkaŋī in the south. The original seat of the language was Gōmānta or Goa, and it is, therefore, often called Gōmāntakī or Goanese. After the Portuguese had conquered Goa a large number of Brāhmaṇs and Śūdras fled and settled on the coast of Kanara. At a later period emigrants brought the language to Belgaum, Sawantwadi, and Ratnagiri, where it is locally known as Bārdēskari, Kudālī and Mālvaŋī.

The KŌŊkaŋī language is spoken throughout the Konkan from Malwan in the north to Karwar in the south. The purest form is considered to be that spoken in Tishwaḍa in Sasṭī, a province of Goa. In North Kanara, KŌŊkaŋī is the home tongue of higher caste Hindus, and partly also of the lower classes. It is the language of the Native Christians of North and South Kanara, and it has also been brought by Konkani settlers to Honawar, Mangalore, and even to Cochin. The Linguistic Survey is not concerned with the languages spoken in South Kanara and Malabar. In North Kanara, KŌŊkaŋī is spoken on the coast, from Karwar to Bhatkal, and inland in Supa Peta and in the towns of Siddapur, Sirsi, and Yellapur.

In Belgaum KŌŊkaŋī is spoken in the south-west of the district, on the frontier towards Sawantwadi, especially in the Belgaum Taluka. It has been variously returned as KŌŊkaŋī, Gōmāntakī, and Bārdēskari. Under the latter name it is also spoken in Khanapur, by the Bardeskars, a tribe of Marāṭhā Brāhmaṇs, which forms one of the subdivisions of the Śēṇvīs.

In Sawantwadi, Christians from Goa have been settled for about two centuries. They are chiefly found in villages in the south-west corner of the State. KŌŊkaŋī is, moreover, the main language of the State. It is usually known as Kudālī, i.e., the language of the Kudal Peta. The same name is also used in Ratnagiri where KŌŊkaŋī is the chief language south of Rajapur. From the Taluk Malwan in the south of Ratnagiri is derived the name Mālvaŋī under which the language is locally known.

KŌŊkaŋī has also been returned from Kolaba, but the Collector states that the dialect so designated is simply the ordinary Marāṭhī of the district.

A few speakers are also found in Dharwar, in Kolhapur and, outside the Bombay Presidency, in Chanda in the Central Provinces, while strong communities of Kōṅkaṇī and Kuḍālī speaking people are found in Bombay Town and Island.

Kōṅkaṇī is bounded on the east and south by Kanarese, and towards the north it gradually merges into Standard Marāṭhī through the dialects known as Saṅgamēśvarī and Bāṅkōṭī.

Kōṅkaṇī is a Marāṭhī dialect, having branched off from the common parent Prakrit at a relatively early period. This fact accounts for the many apparent divergencies between the two forms of speech.

Kōṅkaṇī has, in many respects, preserved an older stage of phonetical development, and shows a greater variety of verbal forms than Standard Marāṭhī. Several forms are peculiar to the dialect, and others have come to be used in a different way from what is the case in Standard Marāṭhī. The tradition according to which the Śēṇvīs, a tribe of Brāhmaṇs who have largely spread over the Konkan from Goa, were originally brought from Trihōtra by Paraśurāma, has been adduced by native writers as pointing to the conclusion that Kōṅkaṇī has a different origin from Marāṭhī and is derived from some old dialect called Sarasvatī Bālabhāshā, which was originally spoken in Tirhut. The same writers also point to the broad pronunciation of the short a, which sounds almost as an o, as a confirmation of this view. The missionaries of Goa and Mangalore, to whom we are largely indebted for our knowledge of Kōṅkaṇī, are of a similar opinion, and contend that Kōṅkaṇī is not a dialect of Marāṭhī. Their view is, however, based on too narrow a conception of the idea connoted by the word dialect. They apparently think that a dialect is a deterioration of some other form of speech, and if such were the case Kōṅkaṇī would certainly be a separate language, as would almost every dialect all over India. The line between dialects and languages is, of course, difficult to draw; but in the case of Marāṭhī and Kōṅkaṇī there cannot be any doubt. They are both derived from the same Prakrit and are both dialects of the same form of speech. The reason for our calling this language Marāṭhī and not Kōṅkaṇī is that the national literature is written in a language which is mainly derived from the northern dialects of Puna and Satara, and not from those spoken in the Konkan. Compare the General Introduction to the group, above, pp. 3 and ff.

Kōṅkaṇī is not a uniform language throughout the area in which it is spoken, but varies according to locality and to the caste of the speakers.

Dialects. In the north, in Sawantwadi and Ratnagiri, the spoken form gradually approaches Standard Marāṭhī. The minor dialects which form the connecting link with that form of speech will be dealt with below. In Goa the language is largely mixed up with Portuguese words. Monsenhor S. R. Dalgado estimates the amount of such loanwords at about one-tenth of the whole vocabulary. In Kanara the proportion of Dravidian words is greater, and it increases as we go southwards. The pronunciation, moreover, varies from place to place. All these differences do not, however, affect the general character of the language, and we need not split it up into sub-dialects. Somewhat different is the case with regard to caste dialects such as Dāldī and Chitpāvanī, and these as well as Kuḍālī will be separately dealt with in the following pages. Minor discrepancies will be noted in the remarks on Kōṅkaṇī grammar below.

The estimates of the number of speakers which follow are based on local returns furnished for the use of the Linguistic Survey. Kōŋkaŋī has been returned under various names, and these have been added in the table which follows :—

Name of District or State.	Reported name of dialect.	Number of speakers.
Bombay Town and Island	Kōŋkaŋī	24,000
„ „ „	Kuḍālī	90,000
Ratnagiri	Goanese	2,300
„	Kuḍālī	302,000
Sawantwadi	Goanese	4,600
„	Kuḍālī	183,600
Kanara	Kōŋkaŋī	157,000
Belgaum	Kōŋkaŋī	4,150
„	Goanese	1,500
„	Bārdēskari	2,500
Dharwar	Kōŋkaŋī	1,700
Kolhapur	Kōŋkaŋī	300
	TOTAL	773,650

To this total must be added the speakers of Dāldī and Chitpāvani, two dialects which form the connecting link between Kuḍālī, the northernmost dialect of Kōŋkaŋī, and the Marāṭhī dialects of the Central and Northern Konkan. Both will be separately dealt with below. The revised figures are 23,500 and 69,000 respectively. The total number of speakers of Kōŋkaŋī and its sub-dialects in the districts which fall within the scope of the Linguistic Survey are, therefore, as follows :—

Kōŋkaŋī, including Kuḍālī	773,650
Dāldī	23,500
Chitpāvani	69,000
TOTAL	866,150

Outside the Bombay Presidency Kōŋkaŋī has only been returned from Chanda in the Central Provinces. At the Census of 1891, speakers were enumerated in the Madras Presidency, in Coorg, Mysore and Rajputana, and Kōŋkaŋī is, lastly, the principal language of the Portuguese dominions in India. The final figures are, therefore, as follows :—

Madras Presidency	132,879
Coorg	2,129
Portuguese India	560,000
Rajputana	47
TOTAL	1,565,391

Kōṅkaṇī is said to have developed an indigenous literature before the Portuguese conquest. This conquest aimed at the introduction of Christianity, and the old manuscripts were burnt by the invaders as containing pagan doctrines. The zeal of the missionaries caused the temples to be burnt and at the same time destroyed the old literature so that no traces are now left. They even tried to exterminate the language, and in 1684 a royal proclamation was issued forbidding the use of Kōṅkaṇī among the natives. In 1731 the Inquisitor of Goa, in a letter to the King, complains of 'the non-observance of the law of His Most Serene Lord Dom Sebastião and of the Goanese councils which forbids to the natives of the country to speak in their idiom, compelling them to speak only the Portuguese language.'

Under such circumstances it cannot be wondered that the study of KōŃkaŃĪ was not initiated by the Portuguese. The merit of having first dealt with this language belongs to an Englishman.

Thomas Stephens (Thomaz Estevão), who came to Goa in 1579 and died there in 1619, wrote the first KōŃkaŃĪ grammar. From his hand we also possess a Catechism and a paraphrase of the New Testament in the popular Ōvī metre. This latter book, which contains 11,018 stanzas in two parts, was printed at Rachol in 1616, was reprinted in 1649 and 1654, and is still a favourite book with native Christians. Since that time a religious literature in KōŃkaŃĪ has grown up, proceeding from the pens of Portuguese missionaries and native converts. For a fuller account of this literature the student may consult Gerson da Cunha's Materials for the History of Oriental Studies amongst the Portuguese, quoted under authorities.

A national literature in KōŃkaŃĪ does not exist. Some lyrical poems have, however, been printed by Mr. M. V. d'Abreu in his periodical publication Ramalhetinho, Goa, 1866.

The old KōŃkaŃĪ literature is said to have been written in the Dēvanāgarī alphabet which was also used by Carey in his translation of the New Testament into this dialect. Later on the Kanarese alphabet was introduced, and, lastly, the Jesuit Fathers of the Christian College at Mangalore have made use of the Roman alphabet in several of their religious books. The modern literature is almost exclusively religious, and it is now written in all the three characters just mentioned.

Written Character.

Pronunciation.—KōŃkaŃĪ is usually described as a strongly nasal language. The nasalisation is carried to the extreme degree by the Śēṇvis of Karwar. Compare below, pp. 188 and ff., where a short account of their dialect will be given. The Anunāsika is much more strongly pronounced than is the case in Standard Marāṭhī, and sometimes entirely supersedes a following sound; thus, paryān, for paryant, until; śetān, for śetānt, in the field. It is usually replaced by the class nasal before all mute consonants; thus, śetānt, Standard Marāṭhī śetāt, in the field. In other respects its use is regulated in the same way as in Standard Marāṭhī.

In the extreme south, about Mangalore, and also among the Śēṇvis of Karwar, we find the same rule as in Kanarese that no word can end in a pure consonant, a short vowel sound being always added. Thus, pūt^a, son; kēs^a, hair; dzān^a, persons. This short vowel is sometimes, especially in Karwar, fully sounded, and we find forms such as sānu, the younger; pūta, sons. The preservation of old final vowels in such dialects is probably due to Kanarese influence, and, as a general rule, we may say that the short a is pronounced in the same cases as in Standard Marāṭhī. The accent usually rests on the final syllable, though never on the short vowel pronounced after a final consonant. Under the influence of the stress a short vowel is often dropped in the penultimate; thus, dhā^a, Standard dahā, ten; sá or sō^a, Standard sahā, six.

The short a has the usual sound like u in 'but' in the north, from Sawantwadi to Bombay. Farther south it becomes more open, like the o in 'hot,' and it is then usually written o or u; thus, borē, well; boiṇ, sister; moṇ, mhaṇ, and mhuṇ, say. It is then often lengthened before compound consonants; thus, pōḍ-chē, which will fall; kōrn, having done. In such cases the ō is also due to the dropping of the u which originally followed; compare Standard Marāṭhī karūn, having done. A final i and u are similarly sometimes reflected epenthetically in the preceding vowel, changing a short a to ē and ō respectively; thus, gēr, from gari, in the house; vair or voir, from uvāri, Standard Marāṭhī var, on; bōv, much, but ḍavuts, with the emphatic particle ts added.

A long ā corresponds to Standard Marāṭhī ē in the Nominative plural of neuter nouns ; thus, vorsā, Standard varshē, years. On the other hand the final ē in strong neuter bases is preserved as ē in Kōṅkaṇī ; thus, borē bhurgē, a good child. Kōṅkaṇī has here preserved an older state of affairs than Standard Marāṭhī, the termination ē in the neuter plural being derived from Prakrit āi, while ē in the neuter singular goes back to a Prakrit ayā. In the same way Kōṅkaṇī has ā in the Future of the first conjugation where Standard Marāṭhī has ē ; thus, uṭhān, Standard uṭhēn, I will rise.

ī and ū are generally treated as in Standard Marāṭhī. They are, however, sometimes shortened, and even dropped, in cases where they are pronounced long in Standard Marāṭhī. Thus, ghet'li and ghet'li, she was taken ; mārūn and mār'n, having struck.

E and o have two different sounds, a long and closed, and an open and short one. The short e and o are best distinguished in the specimens written in Kanarese letters. The Sawantwadi specimens, which are written in Dēvanāgarī, make use of the signs ऐ and ओ in order to denote the short e and o respectively. These signs are also used in Bihārī.

The two sounds are interchangeable in somewhat the same way as short and long i and u, the long sound being shortened in the penultimate and in syllables preceding it. Thus, ēk, one, oblique ekā ; lōk, people, oblique lokā. The open sounds, however, also occur in many other instances.

E is short in the terminations of the plural masculine, and in the neuter singular ; thus, chede gele, the boys went ; kelē, it was done ; sag'lē, all, etc. The short e sometimes also occurs in words such as tel, oil ; set, field ; ek and ēk, one, in all of which the following consonant is derived from a double consonant in Prakrit ; compare Māhārāṣṭri Prakrit tella, oil ; chhetta, field ; ekka, one. In the same way we also find put and pūt, Prakrit putta, son. In this respect Kōṅkaṇī agrees with Sindhī, Lahndā, and the Paisāchī languages of North-Western India. In some of the specimens, however, no distinction is made between the two sounds, and our materials are not sufficient to define the rules regarding their interchange.

The short, open, o is found in the nominative of strong masculine bases and in the verbal forms agreeing with them, in which cases we find ā in Standard Marāṭhī ; thus, ghoḍo, a horse ; gelo, he went. The feminine plural of weak bases, on the other hand apparently ends in ō ; thus, vāṭō, ways ; but also dhuvo, daughters. Open o also occurs in the infinitive, which ends in ūk or ōk, or else in ūk ; thus, mhanōk, to say ; mārūk and mārūk, to strike.

Initial e and o are usually pronounced as ye and vo respectively. Pater Maffei illustrates this tendency by some instances of the native pronunciation of foreign words ; thus, yergo for Latin ergo ; vordo for Latin ordo. He thinks it probable that this pronunciation is due to the influence of Kanarese. Instead of ye we dialectically find yō in yōk, one (Goa and Belgaum), yō, go (Belgaum), etc.

ai and au are not proper diphthongs in Kanarese, but are frequently written instead of āy and āv respectively. The same seems to be the case in Kōṅkaṇī, where ai and āy, au and āv are continually interchanged ; thus, ailo and āylo, he came. When these sounds are nasalised the semivowels y and v are apparently pronounced through the nose. This we must infer from such spellings as bāpāỹk and bāpāĩk, to fathers ; hāñ, hāñ̃, and hāvā̃, I. The correct spellings are probably bāpāỹk and hāñ̃.

It has not been possible to give definite rules for the pronunciation of the vowels in Kōṅkaṇī, because the spelling of the specimens received is not very consistent. The question is, however, of considerable importance for the understanding of the phonetical development of Kōṅkaṇī and also of Marāṭhī, and it is much to be desired that some phonetically trained scholar in the Konkan will give us an exact description of the sounds.

The consonants are, generally speaking, pronounced as in Standard Marāṭhī. Some few exceptions will be noted in what follows.

Aspirated letters have a strong tendency to lose their aspiration (another instance of agreement with the languages of the North-West). Thus, we find boiṇ, Standard bhaiṇ, sister; bāv, Standard bhāv, brother; gēr, Standard gharē, at the house; āmī, Standard amhī, we; āṭ and hāṭ, I; o and ho, this. In bōv, much; rāv^olo, he remained, the h seems to have been elided and replaced by a euphonic v. The aspirates are, however, often preserved in writing. How indistinct their pronunciation is, is shown by the fact that they are sometimes written instead of unaspirated letters; thus, dhūr and dūr, far.

The palatals are pronounced as in Standard Marāṭhī. The emphatic particle ts, before which a short a is inserted if the preceding word ends in a consonant, has preserved the older form chī in Karwar.

The common pronunciation of jñ is gny; thus, gnyān, knowledge. This sound only occurs in borrowed words.

The cerebral letters are pronounced as in Standard Marāṭhī. D and dh appear instead of ḍ in dukar or dhukar, swine. This is probably due to the influence of Kanarese, in which language an initial ḍ is sometimes interchangeable with d.

The cerebral ṇ is used as in Standard Marāṭhī. Note, however, āni, Standard āṇi, and.

The cerebral ḷ is also used as in Standard. Sakaḷ, all, is probably different from sag^olo, all.

V is often dropped before i, and occasionally also before e; thus, ikûk and vikûk, to sell; is^okal and vis^okal, scattered; isār and visār, forget; yepār, business. It has sometimes an aspirated sound; thus, vhaḍ, vhoḍ, and even hoḍ, great; compare Standard vaḍil; vhāḍap, music; sirvhidor, Portuguese servidor, a servant. Similarly we also find mhāl, Standard māl, property. V between vowels is sometimes interchangeable with y; thus, tuvē and tuyē, by thee.

A dental n and l often become cerebralised when a cerebral sound precedes; thus, mhan for mhanṇ, having said; hoḍlo, for hoḍ^olo, big; dhāḍlo and dhālo, for dhāḍ^olo, sent; meḷlo and meḷo for meḷ^olo, he was found. Occasionally we find other instances of assimilation; thus, māllī, for mār^olī, she was struck; vitsāllē for vitsār^olē, it was asked. In a similar way an Anunāsika usually coalesces with a following n; thus, dukrā-nē, for dukrā-nē, by pigs. It may be noted in this connection that some dialects, especially in Belgaum, show the same tendency to drop altogether the Anunāsika that is so characteristic of other Marāṭhī dialects.

Nouns.—Gender is usually distinguished in the same way as in Standard Marāṭhī. Nouns denoting women before puberty or marriage are, however, neuter, and the same gender is also used to denote women of inferior rank. Thus, chedū, a daughter, a girl; tē khañ gēlē, where did she (lit. it) go? In the case of animals the gender is sometimes distinguished by adding the adjectives dāḍlo, male, and bāilo, female; thus, sunē, dog, bāil or bāilē sunē, a bitch; dāḍlē ḍoṅk, a male crane, and so forth.

The plural is formed as in Standard Marāṭhī. We need only remember that the feminine plural ends in ō, ī, and o, and the neuter plural of weak bases in ā; thus, rāṇyo, queens; vorsā, years.

The oblique form of feminine bases in ī ends in yē, plural yā; thus, rāṇī, a queen, dative rāṇyēk, plural rāṇyāḱ. Bāpūy, a father, has the oblique form bāpēy. In other respects the oblique form of all bases is the same as in Standard Marāṭhī.

The oblique form is sometimes used for the genitive and even for the dative ; thus, Devā kurpā, God's mercy ; kityā and kityāk, what for ? why ? bāpāy (Belgaum), to the father.

The instrumental, which case is also used as the case of the agent, is formed by adding n to the oblique form ; thus, bhukēn, by hunger. The Saraswat Brāhmans of Karwar sometimes use this case irregularly ; thus, bāpsunē āsille-kaḍe, father-by being-to, to where the father was ; hāvē tugeli tsākri kartā, me-by thy service am-doing, I am doing thy service.

The genitive is formed as in the Standard by adding the suffixes tsō, fem. chī, n. chē, to the oblique form. A derived adjective which is used as a genitive is sometimes formed by adding the same suffixes to the base ; thus, tyā gāv-chyā ekā gēr rāv'lo, that village-of one's house-in-remained, he stayed with an inhabitant of that village. As in Standard Marāthī, the genitive is inflected like an adjective.

Another suffix of the genitive is gelo ; thus, mā-gelyā bāpsu-gelyā tsākrā-paikī, among the servants of my father. This form seems to be peculiar to the north, and occurs in specimens received from Karwar and Bombay. A form bāpāy-lo, my father's, also occurs in the specimen received from Bombay.

The locative is formed by adding r to the oblique form, or, in the case of animate beings, to the oblique form of the genitive, thus, vātēr, on the road ; bāpā-chēr, with the father. The suffix gēr in ām-gēr, with us ; Pedrū-gēr, at Pedro's, is originally a locative of gar, house. Old locatives are also šetā, in the field ; garā, in the house ; velī, at the time, and so on.

With regard to Pronouns, the only point which calls for a special remark is the fact that the nominative of the first person singular is formed from the base which occurs in Sanskrit aham ; thus, hāṭ, āṭ, hāv, hāū, I. The case of the agent in hāvē or hāvē, by me.

The Kōnkanī Verb presents several characteristic features.

The verb substantive will be found in the Skeleton Grammar on pp. 172 and f. The forms used in Kuḍālī are different. It is, however, probable that the conjugation given in the Skeleton Grammar is not the only one, and that the Kuḍālī forms also occur in Kōnkanī proper. The usual forms are derived from asū, to be, but we also occasionally find forms such as hāy, is ; hotā, was ; and it seems safe to assume that corresponding forms may also be used in the other persons.

The finite verb differs in some points from Standard Marāthī.

The active and the passive constructions are used as in Standard Marāthī ; thus, hāṭ mar'tā, I die ; tāṇē sāsār dilo, by-him his-property was given. The impersonal construction is also, in most cases, used regularly ; thus, tāṇē sāṅg'lē, by-him it-was-said, he said. In the cases, however, where an inflected object is dependent on a transitive verb in the past tense the verb usually agrees with the object as in the Konkan Standard. Compare Gujarātī. Thus, tāṇē tā-kā dhād'lo, him-by as-for-him he-was-sent, he sent him.

With regard to the formation of tenses, Kōnkanī has apparently lost the past habitual. There are no traces of it in Pater Maffei's grammar. In the specimens received from Sawantwadi and Bombay, however, we find forms such as tsalait, they used to treat ; hādīt, they used to bring ; vharat, they used to carry. On the other hand, Kōnkanī has developed some new tenses.

The present tense differs from Marāthī in that it does not change for gender. Thus we find to, tī, and tē nid'tā, he, she, and it sleeps. This tense is often used to denote future time, and a new future tense has been formed from it by adding lo ; thus, nid'tolō, I shall sleep. Compare Rājasthānī. The form ending in ān or in, corresponding to Standard ēn, īn, respectively, is also used but has commonly the sense of a contingent future ; thus, nidān, I may sleep ; mārīn, I may strike.

The imperfect is often formed in the same way as in Standard Marāṭhī, but it may also take the suffix tālō ; thus, nid^atālō, fem. -lī, n. -lē, I was sleeping.

Kōṅkaṇī has developed a perfect as well as a past tense, the former being a contraction of the past participle and the verb substantive. Thus, nid^alō, I slept ; nid^alā, from nidal āhā, I have slept.

The two forms of the past participle, Marāṭhī nid^alā and nid^alēlā, have been differentiated in their use in Kōṅkaṇī, the former being a past, and the latter a pluperfect participle, from which a pluperfect tense is formed ; thus, nidullō or nid^alolō, I had slept ; gellō, I had gone.

The infinitive in ũ is often used as an imperative ; thus, āsũ, be ; gālũ, let him put, or, he may put. The usual case suffixes may be added to it ; thus, korũk, in order to do ; yēũ-chē āsā, it is to be gone. The suffix tso, chī, chē, added to the infinitive in ũ or to the root, forms a future participle passive, which is used like the corresponding Latin participle in undus to denote the different forms of the verbal noun. Thus, yēũ-chē āsā, Latin eundum est, a going should be done ; khuśālāy kar-chī āni santōs pāv-tso somā dzāvn āsā, merriment to-be-made and pleasure to-be-felt proper having-become is, it is proper to make merry and to be glad. Compare Latin ad urbem condendam. This participle also corresponds to the Standard Marāṭhī form in vē, from which the subjunctive mood is formed ; thus, hāvē nid-chē, I ought to sleep.

The various participial forms are also employed to form relative clauses. The relative pronoun is seldom used, especially in the south. This state of affairs is probably due to the influence of Kanarese.

The causal verb is formed by adding āy instead of Standard āv ; thus, karāylō, I caused to do.

The potential verb is always used impersonally and ends in ye or yet ; thus, hāvē mārīye, I can beat.

Dzā or dzāy is added in order to denote obligation or necessity ; thus, hāvē mārī-dzāy, I should beat.

The irregular verbs will be found in the Skeleton Grammar. In this place we may only note that the root dzān, to know, forms its present from the root ; thus, dzānā, I know. The corresponding negative verb is nyānā or neñā, I do not know. Other tenses do not occur. In a similar way we also find tsallō, I go ; compare Māhārāṣṭrī Prakrit challāmi, I go.

The negative verb is a characteristic feature of Kōṅkaṇī. The usual Marāṭhī forms often occur, but a new system of negative conjugation has also been developed. It is effected by adding the various forms of the negative verb to the base in the present and imperfect tenses ; thus, nida-nā, he does not sleep ; nida-nānt, they do not sleep ; nida-nāt^alō, I was not sleeping. The past tense is often formed from the present by adding dzālo, became ; thus, vatsa-nā dzālo, he did not go. More commonly, however, it is formed by adding the present tense of the verb substantive to the infinitive in uk (ōk) or ũ (ō) ; thus, nidũk-nā, I did not sleep ; vatsōk-nānt, they did not go.

It is hoped that when the preceding remarks are borne in mind the student will be able to easily grasp the features of the language from the skeleton grammar which follows. Space does not allow us to go into further detail, and in order to get a thorough knowledge of the language it will be necessary to work through Pater Maffei's grammar.

Postpositions are added to the oblique form; thus, bāpā-kaḍe or bāpāy-kaḍe, with the father; putā-lāgī, near the son. The genitive is inflected as an adjective; thus, bāpā-chī burgī, the father's children.

Adjectives ending in o have different forms for genders and numbers. Thus, boro, good; fem. borī, n. borē, obl. boryā and borē; plur. bore, f. boryō, n. borī. Other adjectives do not change.

Indefinite pronouns are kōṇ, some one; koṇ-i, anyone; khī, something.

III.—VERBS.

A. Verbs Substantive—

Āsū, to be, is conjugated as a regular verb. Only the Present tense is irregular, and has two forms āsā and āhā. Both are conjugated in the same way. Thus, āsā, I am; āsāy, thou art; āsā, he is; āsāv, we are; āsāt, yon are, they are.

Negative Verb Substantive—nā, I am not, 2. nāy, 3. nā; plural 1. nāv, 2. nāt, 3. nānt; or naī throughout. Imperfect nat'lō, I was not; Past nas'lō, I was not.

B. Finite Verb—

FIRST CONJUGATION.—nidūk or nidōk, to sleep.

Verbal Nouns, nid-chē, nidū-chē, nidūk, to sleep.

Participles, Present, nidat, nid'tolo; Imperfect, nid'tālō; Past, nid'lo; Future, nid'tso, he who will sleep.

Conjunctive Participle, nidūn, nidon, nidn, having slept.

Adverbial Participle, nid'tanā, nid'tā āstanā, while sleeping.

	Present.	Past.	Perfect.	1st Future.	2nd Future.	Imperative.
Sing. 1	nid'tā	nid'lō ; f. -lī ; n. -lē	nid'lā , f. -lyā , n. -lā	nid'tolō , f. -telī , n. -telē	nidān
2	nid'tāy	nid'loy ; f. -liy ; n. -lēy	nid'lāy , f. -lyāy , n. -lāy	nid'tolōy ; f. -telīy ; n. -telēy	nid'sī	nid.
3	nid'tā	nid'lo ; f. -lī ; n. -lē	nid'lā , f. -lyā , n. -lā	nid'tolo , f. -telī , n. -telē	nidāt
Plur. 1	nid'tāv	nid'le ; f. -lyo ; n. -lī	nid'lyāv	nid'telyāv or nid'tele ; f. -lyō ; n. -lī	nidū	nidyā.
2	nid'tāt	" "	nid'lyāt	nid'telyāt or nid'telyāt or nid'tele ; f. -lyō ; n. -lī	nid'sāt	nidā.
3	nid'tāt	" "	nid'lyāt , n. -lyāt	nid'telyāt or nid'telyāt or nid'tele ; f. -lyō ; n. -lī	nid'tit

Present Definite, nidat āsā, I am sleeping.—Imperfect, nidat ās'lō, I was sleeping; or nid'tālō.—Pluperfect, nidullō or nid'lolō, f. -lelī, n. -lelē, I had slept.—Contingent Future, nid'tō, if I had slept, or, I would have slept. The second form of the Imperfect, the Pluperfect and the Contingent Future are conjugated as the first future.

SECOND CONJUGATION.—mārūk, to strike.

	Past.	Perfect.	Second Future.	Imperative.
Sing. 1	hāvē	hāvē	mārīn
2	tuvē	tuvē	mār'sī	mār.
3	tā-nē , etc.	tā-nē , etc.	mārīt
Plur. 1	āmī	āmī	mārū	mār'yā.
2	tumī	tumī	mār'sāt	mārī.
3	tā-nī	tā-nī	mār'tit

Pluperfect, hāvē mār'latē, I had struck. Y is often added to the Past, Perfect, and Pluperfect tenses when the agent is of the second person singular. Thus, tuvē mār'lēy, thou struckest. Present participle mārīt, striking. Other tenses are formed as in the first conjugation.

C. Irregular Verbs.—Dzānā, I know, has only a present, conjugated as nid'tā; thus, dzānāy, thou knowest; dzānāt, they know. So also neñā, I don't know.

Votsūk, to go, forms its tenses irregularly; thus, voitā, or vetā, I go; gelō, I went.

Verbs ending in vowels form their future after the second conjugation; thus, gēn, for gein, I shall take; getī, they will take.

Several verbs form their past tense irregularly. Thus, khā, eat, past khelō; kar, do, past kelō; mor, die, past melō; var, carry, past velō; yē, come, past āylō; vots, go, past gelō; mon, say, past moīē; gē, take, past getlo; aik, hear, past aikalo.

D. Causative Verb.—Formed by adding āy; thus, karāy-tā, I cause to do; hāvē karāylē, I caused to do.

E. Potential Verb.—Only used impersonally with the agent in the Dative, the Instrumental, or the Instrumental formed from the Genitive. Thus, tā-kā, tā-nē, or tā-chyān, māriye (or māriyet), he may, he can strike. In a similar way dāi or dāi is added to the verb in order to denote what is necessary, the agent being put in the Instrumental. Thus, hāvē votsā-dāi, I must go.

F. Negative Verb.—Present, nida-nā, I did not sleep; Imperfect, nida-nāt'lō, I was not sleeping; Past, nida-nā-dāilo or nidūk-nā, I did not sleep; Future, nid-tso nā, I shall not sleep, etc.

Of the specimens which follow the two first ones have been received from Sawantwadi. They represent the language spoken by the higher classes of settlers from Goa. The language of the lower classes is stated to differ but slightly. The third specimen has been taken down from the mouth of a Native Christian in North Kanara. A list of Standard Words and Phrases will be found below on pp. 394 and ff. It has been received from Kanara and is independent of the specimens.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

One hundred and fifty years may have passed since our ancestors came from Goa. The reason why they came was that they found better opportunities for work and business here than at Goa. At that time the Bhonslas held sway at Vadi, and those rulers treated them kindly. There were many good artists among them, and also some few traders. The traders used to bring ghee and freshly pressed oil from Goa, and took tobacco from Vadi to Goa. At that time there were no good roads between Vadi and Goa. Therefore all merchandise which should be brought and carried had to be put on oxen. On the road there was fear of robbers; therefore if there was money to be carried, it was done by putting it in tins of oil and pretending that it was oil. The good houses and buildings in Vadi are all (works) of their and their descendants' hands. Up to this time there are many good masons among the Christians of Vadi. At Vadi the Christian population increased. Then one priest was sent out here by the bishop of Goa. A site was given him by the king of Vadi to build a church on, and the Christian religion began to prosper. By and by one Vicar was not enough for Vadi, therefore a curate was sent out. At present there are over 5,000 Christians in the kingdom of Vadi; among them there are such divisions as Brāhmaṇs, Kshatriyas, and Śūdras, and their languages are also different, but they are not very different, and it is not difficult for one to understand the language of another. In the language of Goa many Portuguese words are mingled, and in the language of the Christians of Vadi Marāṭhī words are mixed, but they are not so many. Through the influence of the priests, some few Portuguese words have also been adopted, owing to the fact that the priests who come to Vadi are all from Goa and their language is Goanese, which is mixed with Portuguese words. But as far as possible they avoid using Portuguese words in their sermons. They know that the people here do not learn Portuguese, and that Portuguese words will not be intelligible to them.

The preceding specimens represent what might be called Standard Kōṇkaṇī, the language of North Kanara, Goa, and Sawantwadi. The specimens received from Bombay Town and Island agree in all essential points. The same is the case with the language spoken in Malwan and Vengurla in the southern corner of Ratnagiri. The dialect spoken in the South-West of Belgaum, which is sometimes called Gōmāntakī and Bārdēskari, shows a strong tendency to drop the Anunāsika. Thus, tsolok, for tsalūk, to go; āv, for hāv, I. The aspirates usually lose their aspiration, though they are often preserved in writing, thus, vodik, for adhik, more; vai for hai, yes. ḍ and ḷ seem to be interchangeable as is also sometimes the case in Kanarese; thus, tsoḍ and tsol, for tsaḍ, much; dukoḍ and dukol, famine. The occasional softening of hard consonants is also due to the same influence; thus, yēk, yōk, and yēg, one; nesog for nesūk, to put on, etc. The final y in verbal forms is usually dropped; thus, āhā and āsā, thou art. On the other hand, y is substituted for t in the second and third persons plural of the present tense; thus, vetāy, you, they, go. In other respects the various Kōṇkaṇī dialects of Belgaum only differ from the Standard form in unimportant matters, and there will be no difficulty in understanding the short specimen which follows. It has been received as illustrating the language spoken by the Bārdēskars, one of the four divisions of the Śēṇvis or Gauḍ Brāhmaṇs.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

HOW AN ARAB LOVED HIS HORSE.

Once upon a time there was a very poor Arab. He did not possess anything to wear, but had a very good horse. Now it happened that a man came from a far country in order to buy his horse. At first he was not at all willing to sell it. Afterwards, however, he agreed to sell it because he was so very poor. He took his beloved horse to the other man, who willingly paid the price for it. The Arab took the rupees in his hand, looked at them and afterwards at his horse, and said: 'I am now going to give thee up to others; they will bind thee, and, who knows, if they will not beat thee and thus torment thee. Well, go home, then. My children will be glad to see thee.' With such words he threw the rupees on the ground, took the horse, and went straight off. But it was not right of him to do so after having taken the money. First he agreed to sell the horse, and afterwards he broke his word. And thus it should be considered wrong to break your word when you have once agreed upon a thing, whatever it may be.

The Kōṇkaṇī dialect spoken by the Sarasvat Brāhmaṇs of Karwar presents several peculiarities of its own, and it will, therefore, be illustrated by means of a separate specimen.

The Sarasvat Brāhmaṇs, who belong to the Śēṇvis or Gaud Brāhmaṇs, like other Brāhmaṇs of the Konkan, assert that they were originally brought from Trihōtra by Paraśurāma. Trihōtra they wrongly identify with the modern Tirhut. This tradition is found in the Sahyādrīkhaṇḍa of the Skandapurāṇa. They assert that they first settled in Goa, from which place they fled after the Portuguese conquest. They are now found in large numbers in towns and villages in Karwar and Ankola on the coast, and inland in Haliyal, Supa, and Sirsi.

They are said to speak very fast, and with a singing tone, and their language is rich in tatsamas, but comparatively free from Kanarese and Portuguese loanwords.

The most characteristic feature of their dialect is the fact that, generally speaking, no word ends in a consonant. Thus, we find pūtu instead of pūt, son; dōni instead of dōn, two. Exceptions to this rule are only apparent; thus, dog dzāṇa pūta, two persons sons. Here dog-dzāṇa forms a compound, and this fact accounts for the termination of dog.

The short final vowels are unaccented. This is shown by the fact that ī, ū, ē, and ō in the preceding syllable are not shortened. Thus, ēku ghōḍo, a horse, but genitive ekā ghōḍyā-gelē.

The short final vowels seem to be the old Prākṛit terminations. Compare ēku pūtu, Māhārāshṭrī Prākṛit ekkō puttō, a son; ēki dhura, Māhārāshṭrī ekkī dhūā, a daughter; pūta, Māhārāshṭrī puttā, sons; dōṇi, Māhārāshṭrī doṇṇi, two. It is probable that their preservation is due to the influence of Kanarese.

Long final vowels are often shortened; thus, āssā, I am; āssa, thou art; dī, give; saglī āsti, all (his) estate.

E and o have the same sounds as in Standard Kōṇkaṇī, and the vowel system is, in all essentials, the same in both forms of speech.

The Anunāsika seems to be rather strongly pronounced. Final vowels are frequently nasalised; thus, ānĩ, and; āmmĩ, we; hāvĩ, I; kānũ, ear.

Consonants are often doubled between vowels; thus, mākkā, to me; tānnē, by him; āssa, is; bhittarī, inside.

Hard consonants are sometimes softened after vowels, as is also the case in Dravidian languages. Thus, mākkā mārṭida, they will beat me, I shall be beaten; tajjē, Standard tā-chē, his.

Nouns.—Weak bases end in vowels. Masculine nouns end in u in the Nominative singular, and in a in the plural; feminine bases in a and i, plural o and ĩ; neuter bases in a, plural ā; thus, pūtu, a son; pūta, sons; dhura, a daughter; dhuro, daughters; pāṭhi, a back; pāṭhĩ, backs; chittala, a deer; chittalā, deer. The instrumental and case of the agent ends in nē; the genitive in gelē and chē; the locative in āntũ; thus, bāpsu-nē, by the father; rādṣvā-nē, with ropes; dhure-chē nāvā, the daughter's name; ma-gelyā bāpsu-gelyā tsākrā-paikĩ, among my father's servants; gāvāntũ, in the village. In other points the declension of nouns agrees with Standard Kōṇkaṇī.

Pronouns.—Hāvā, I; hāvē, by me; majjē and ma-gelē, my; āmmĩ, we, and so on. 'Who' is kōṇũ, and 'what' is ittē.

Verbs.—The second person singular has the same form as the third person, and the third person plural is also used for the first and second persons. Thus, vattā, I go; vattā, thou goest, he goes; vattāti, we, you, or they, go. The first person singular of the second future ends in nā; thus, āssanā, I shall be; mārīnā, I shall strike.

The second person imperative ends in a in the first, and in i in the second conjugation; thus, vatsa, go; baisa, sit; kari, make; mārī, strike.

'I should strike' is hāvē mār-kāḍa.

The verbal noun in chē is used in the oblique form as an infinitive; thus, mhoṇ-chā (i.e. mhoṇ-chyā) lāglo, he began to say. An infinitive of purpose is often formed by adding the suffix śĩ; thus, davar-śĩ, in order to keep; kari-śĩ, in order to make.

The conjunctive participle ends in ūnu or nu, the final u being often nasalised; thus, kōṇnu, having done; vāṭūnu, having divided; vatsunũ, having gone.

In most characteristics, however, the dialect of Karwar is simply Standard Kōṇkaṇī, as will appear from a perusal of the version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows. The alphabet used is Kanarese. A list of Standard Words and Phrases will be found below on pp. 394 and ff.

KUḌĀĪ.

It has already been remarked that the dialects spoken in Sawantwadi and Ratnagiri gradually approach the dialects of the Central Konkan, which again, in their turn, form the connecting link between Kōnkaṇī and the Konkan Standard of Marāṭhī.

Standard Kōnkaṇī is spoken in the south-west corner of Sawantwadi and also in scattered settlements of the Talukas of Vengurla and Malwan in Ratnagiri. The principal language of Sawantwadi and of the southern part of Ratnagiri is also a Kōnkaṇī subdialect. It is usually called Kuḍāḷī, a name derived from the Kulal peta in Sawantwadi. In Ratnagiri it is sometimes also called Mālvaṇī.

The Kuḍāḷī dialect is spoken from the Santarda River, which falls in the Arabian Sea at Terekhol, in the south, to Deogad, Kankoli, and Phonda Ghat in the north. The eastern and western boundaries are the Sahyadri Hills and the Arabian Sea respectively. Kuḍāḷī is also spoken in Bombay Town and Island by settlers from Sawantwadi and Ratnagiri. The following numbers have been returned for this Survey :—

Ratnagiri	302,000
TOTAL	575,600

The chief points in which Kuḍāḷī differs from Standard Kōnkaṇī are as follows :—

The long and short e and o are not clearly distinguished. The short forms are still found in considerable number in Sawantwadi. Thus, te-kā, to him; kelō, done; hotō and hutō, was, etc. Both ē and ō are, however, usually long, just as is the case in Standard Marāṭhī.

Ā or ā is used for Standard Marāṭhī ē, not only in cases where it is so used in Standard Kōnkaṇī, but also elsewhere. Thus, varsā, years; ḍuk^arā, pigs; tā sag^alā, that all.

There is a strong tendency to drop the Anunāsika, a tendency which is also found in the Kōnkaṇī of Belgaum and in the dialects of the Central Konkan. Thus, tyētullō for tyātullō, from among them; teṇī and teṇī, by him (honorific plural).

The cerebral ṇ is correctly used in Sawantwadi, but it is freely replaced by n in Ratnagiri and Bombay; thus, pānī and pānī, water; kōn and kōn, who? The dental n is also substituted for Standard Marāṭhī l in nhān, small.

V is often dropped before i and ī; thus vīs and īs, twenty; itsārṇā, to ask. It is sometimes also dropped in the conjunctive participle in vn or ūn; thus, mhaṇān, having said; uṭhān, having risen. It is replaced by y in thēy, keep (Ratnagiri), for which the Sawantwadi texts give thēv.

The inflection of nouns agrees with Standard Kōṇkaṇī. The word bāpūs, father, however, differs in the oblique form which is bāpās or bāpāśī; thus, bāpās-tsō or bāpāśī-tsō, of a father.

The pronoun of the first person singular takes the form mī or miyā as in Standard Marāṭhī while Kōṇkaṇī has hāv. Apan is used as the corresponding plural including the person addressed.

The pronoun tō, that, forms its dative and corresponding forms from the base tē or tyā; thus, te-kā, tē-kā and tyā-kā, to him. The other demonstrative and relative pronouns are inflected in the same way.

'What?' is kāy as in Standard Marāṭhī. The form kitē seems, however, also to be used, for we find kītyāk, why?

The verb substantive forms its present tense as follows:—mī āsāy; tū āsay, or āsas; tō āsā; āmī āsāv; tumī āsāt; tē āsat. In the second person singular we also find has or āhas, and in the third hā or āhā, and the other persons can certainly be formed in a corresponding way. The past tense is 1. hōtāy; 2. hōtay; 3. hōtō; plural, 1. hōtāv; 2. hōtyāt; 3. hōtē.

Other intransitive verbs are conjugated by means of the same suffixes. Thus, āmī dātāv, we go; tumī gēlyāt, you went. In the future the form in ān is in common use; thus, mhaṇān, I shall say; mēlāt, it will be got. But also yētalō, he will come. The habitual past seems to be used as in Standard Marāṭhī; thus, dāy-nā, he would not go.

The past tense of transitive verbs agrees with Standard Kōṇkaṇī. The corresponding perfect seems to be used in the same sense. Only a few forms occur. The second person singular ends in lay or las, the third person singular in lyān, the first person plural in lāv; the second person plural in lyāt, and the third person plural in lyānī; thus, tū mār^olay, or mār^olas, thou struckest; tēṇī mār^olyān, he struck; āmī mār^olāv, we struck; tumī mār^olyāt, you struck; tē-ṇī mār^olyānī, they struck; tū tū kōṇā-kad^osūn rik^otā ghēt^olay, or ghēt^olas, thou that whom-from buying tookest? from whom did you buy that? tyē-nā tyē-chyā galyāk miṭī mār^olyān ānī tyē-tsō mukō ghēt^olyān, him-by his neck-on embracing was-struck and his kiss was-taken, he fell on his neck and kissed him. In tū jēvān kēla has, thou hast made a feast, kēla has is the uncontracted form of kēlas. The future is formed as in Standard Marāṭhī; thus, mī mār^oin, I shall strike. In the second person singular we find mār^ośūt and mār^ośil.

In other respects the specimens which follow will be found to agree with Standard Kōṇkaṇī. The first specimen, which has been received from Sawantwadi, represents the language of the higher classes. The lower classes are stated to use the same form of speech, with but slight differences in pronunciation and inflection. Of the second specimen only the beginning has been given in transliteration and translation without the corresponding passage in the vernacular character. It comes from Ratnagiri.

DĀLDĪ.

The Dāldīs or Nawāits are a caste of Muhammadan fishermen. They claim an Arab descent, but speak a broken Kōṇkaṇī. They are found in the Madras Presidency, in Kanara, Ratnagiri, Janjira, and Bombay Town and Island. The figures returned for the Linguistic Survey are as follows :—

Janjira	11,500
Ratnagiri	2,000
TOTAL										23,500

To this total must be added the Nawāits of the Madras Presidency, for the number of whom no estimates are available.

In Ratnagiri the Dāldīs are chiefly found in the Ratnagiri sub-division, and in Kanara they occur in Karwar, but mainly in Bhatkul.

The dialect spoken by the Dāldīs is not the same over all the territory in which they are found, but differs and approaches the various local dialects of their neighbours.

Many of the Dāldīs are said to be able to talk and understand Hindōstānī. This latter language has, however, had little influence on their dialect. Several Hindōstānī loanwords have been adopted, and some phonetical features are probably due to the influence of that form of speech. Thus, the change of the cerebral ḷ to l, and, in Ratnagiri and Janjira, the substituting of r for ḍ between vowels. Compare instances such as ḍōlō, eye; ghōrō, horse. These peculiarities are, however, also shared by the Marāṭhī of the Konkan.

Of the Kōnkaṇī dialects, Dāldī most closely agrees with Kuḍālī. It has the same form mī for I, and the same third person singular of the past tense of transitive verbs ending in ān; thus, te-nā bollān, him-by it-was-said, he said.

A peculiarity of the dialect is the use of the form ker in addition to kar, do; thus, kerū-lā, to do; kerlā, done. The latter form shows that the past tense of this verb differs from Kōnkaṇī.

Characteristic are also the many forms of nouns ending in s; thus, putūs, son; bhāvs, brother; dhuvās, daughter; bāpā-lā and bāpā-lās, to a father; putā-chīs rāhām, pity with the son, etc.

In most respects, however, Dāldī will be found to agree with Kōnkaṇī and with the dialects surrounding the speakers. Thus, long and short e and o are distinguished in Karwar, but apparently not in Ratnagiri and Janjira. The Anunāsika is often dropped or replaced by n, and so forth. On the whole, there will be no difficulty in understanding the two specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, received from Karwar. It has been printed in Kanarese characters. The second specimen is a folk-tale from Janjira, and is printed in Dēvanāgarī. Each is accompanied by a transliteration and translation.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a Musalmān mendicant. He had four sons. His wife said to him, 'you are sitting idle at home and do no work. What shall these children eat?' He then said to her, 'wife, wait for to-day and give me four roast cakes to-morrow morning, so that I may go in search of some employment.' Accordingly the wife gave her husband four roast cakes early the next morning, and the husband took them and set out in the direction of a forest. After having entered a thick jungle, at about noon he chanced to see a well. He sat down by the side of the well, and taking out his four cakes placed them at its four corners, one at each, and said, 'shall I eat one or two?' At that moment a serpent in the well said to his daughter, 'daughter, there is a hungry faqīr sitting by the side of the well. Give him something to eat.' The daughter replied that there was nothing in the house which she could offer him to eat. Thereupon the father said, 'take this our cooking pot up there and burn some incense underneath it. Something will then be cooked in the pot which you should offer him to eat.' The daughter accordingly ascended and did as her father had ordered. She put the food before the faqīr, and also presented him with the pot. The faqīr walked away from the place with the pot. While journeying he happened to come to a village inhabited by thieves. It was night and all the thieves of the village had gone out on business, and therefore the faqīr made his lodging in the veranda of one of their houses. The wife of the thief, who was at home, perceived the faqīr's pot, and it struck her that it must possess some special merit. In the meanwhile her husband came home from his thieving excursion. The wife said to her husband, 'this faqīr has a pot which is endowed with some special merit. When therefore the faqīr goes to bed, take one pot from our house and exchange it for the one which he possesses.' Her husband acted upon her instructions. The wife then placed the pot on the fire and in a moment she saw elaborate dishes cooked up in it, to which the husband and wife helped themselves. Then the wife said to her husband, 'there is no more need for going a-thieving, we have now enough to live upon.'

CHITPĀVANĪ.

The Chitpāvans or Koṅkanasths are the chief Konkan Brāhman. Their headquarters are Parshuram Hill, near Chiplun, in Ratnagiri. They are found all over Ratnagiri, in Bombay Town and Island, and in Sawantwadi. In the latter district they are chiefly found in the towns of Vadi, Kudal, and Banda, in some villages near the Sahyadris, and in the Ajgaon sub-division, but are not numerous. Estimates of the number of speakers of the Chitpāvanī dialect are only available for Bombay and Ratnagiri. They are as follows :—

The Chitpāvans understand and speak Standard Marāṭhī, which language they use in their dealings with outsiders, only introducing a more marked pronunciation of the nasal sound. Their home tongue is, however, closely related to Kōṅkaṇī, and forms a connecting link between that form of speech and the dialects of the Central Konkan.

Ā is used for ē in the same cases as in Kuḍālī; thus, ḍuk^rrā̃, swine; ḍzā̃ madzhā̃ sē tā̃ sag^llā̃ tudzhā̃ sē, what mine is that all thine is.

Ē and ō are apparently always long. Thus, ghōḍē, horses.

The inflection of Nouns in many points agrees with Standard Marāṭhī. The oblique form of strong feminine bases ends in ī; thus, mul^agī-tsā̃, of a daughter. The dative ends in lā; thus, mān^asā-lā, to a man, etc.

Pronouns.—Mē, I, by me; mā-lā, to me; tēnīn, by him; kitā̃, what? Other forms mainly agree with Kōṅkaṇī.

Verbs.—The verb substantive is sa-nā, to be. Present tense, sō̃, I am; sas, thou art; sē, he is; sō̃, we are; sā̃, you are; sat, they are. The regular present mē sat^sā̃ seems to be used as a habitual present, 'I usually am'; thus, tū mājhē-ḍzaval rōḍ^s sat^sas, thou art always with me. The past tense is regularly formed; thus, tū salōs, thou wast.

The finite verb forms its present from the participle in tsō̃; thus, mē mār^atsā̃, I strike. This participle has no longer a passive meaning. The future participle passive ends in vā̃, corresponding to Standard Marāṭhī vē̃; thus, mē mār^avā̃, by-me a-striking-should be done, I should strike.

The past tense of intransitive verbs agrees with Kōṅkaṇī in the singular and with Standard Marāṭhī in the plural. The second person singular, however, ends in s and not in y as in Kōṅkaṇī; thus, gēlō̃, I went; gēlōs, thou wentest; gēlō, he went; plural, gēlō̃, gēlā̃, gēlē.

The past tense of transitive verbs ends in s in the second person singular; in n in the third person singular; and in t in the second person plural. Thus, tū mā-lā bak^rrō dilōs, by-thee me-to a-goat was given; bāpān ... mīṭhī mār^alīn āṇī tē-tsō mukō ghēt^rlōn, the-father-by embracing was-struck and his kiss was-taken, the father embraced him and kissed him.

The past tense is sometimes formed without the suffix lō; thus, mē tē-chē mul^agē-lā pushkal tsābūk māy^rrē, I have beaten his son with many stripes.

The perfect, future, and habitual past are formed as in Standard Marāṭhī. Thus, mē pātak kēlā̃ sē, by-me sin made is, I have sinned; mē mhaṇēn, I will say; ḍzāy-nā, he would not go; khāy^t, they usually ate.

The imperative of dē-nā, to give, is dē or dēs. Other imperatives are regular; thus, ghē, take; yā, go ye.

The verbal noun in nā, corresponding to Standard Marāṭhī nē̃, is common; thus, mār^anā, to strike; khānā, to eat. The usual oblique base of the verbal noun ends in vē̃, corresponding to Standard Marāṭhī vyā̃; thus, ghēvē-chī yōgyatā, fitness to take.

The conjunctive participle ends in unī or nī; thus, mārunī and mār^anī, having struck; ḍzāv^anī, having gone.

The vocabulary differs to some extent from that of Standard Marāṭhī. Thus, we find bōḍyō, a son; chēḍ, a daughter; tsōkhōṭ, good; tēḍ^alā, then; kitā̃, what? etc. A short list of such words has been printed in the Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. X, Bombay 1880, pp. 111 and f.

It is hoped that the preceding remarks are sufficient to remove every difficulty in reading the version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in Chitpāvanī which follows. A list of Standard Words and Phrases will be found below on pp. 394 and ff.

brother dead was, he again alive is; and lost was, he found is.'

Beginning from the west this dialect covers the eastern part of Buldana, leaving the western border to Standard Marāṭhī. The frontier line thence goes northwards so far as the river Tapti, and then turns eastwards, including Ellichpur and the southern parts of Betul, Chhindwara, and Seoni, with speakers all over the southern part of Balaghat. Thence the line turns southwards, including Bhandara and the north-western portion of Chanda, whence it turns back to Buldana including the greater part of Wun and Basim. The dialect is further spoken by scattered settlers in Raipur, Bilaspur, Nandgaon, Kawardha, and Bombay Town and Island.

It has been stated above that several minor dialects which were originally returned from Berar and the Central Provinces have proved to be local forms of the current Marāṭhī of the said districts. They are the following :—

Name of dialect.	Where spoken.	Number of speakers.
Dhan'garī	Chhindwara	1,800
Dzhārpī	Ellichpur	5,000
Gōvārī	Chhindwara	2,000
"	Chanda	500

Māhārī	Chhindwara	9,000
Marhēṭī	Balaghat	?
Natakānī	Chanda	180
	TOTAL	146,180

Of these minor dialects the Marhēṭi of Balaghat has been slightly influenced by the neighbouring dialects of Eastern Hindī, and the Natakānī of Chanda has, in some points, accommodated itself to Telugu. On the whole, however, the various forms of speech enumerated in the table are essentially identical with the form of Marāṭhī commonly spoken in Berar and the Central Provinces.

This form of speech has also largely influenced the dialect of the Katiās of Chhindwara and Narsinghpur, which has therefore been dealt with after the minor dialects just mentioned. The number of speakers has been estimated at 18,700.

We thus arrive at the following total for the Marāṭhī of Berar and the Central Provinces :—

Varhāḍi	2,084,023
Nāgpuri	1,823,475
Minor dialects	146,180
Katiā	18,700
TOTAL	4,072,378

In connection with this form of speech it has been found convenient to deal with some broken dialects spoken in the Bastar State, Kanker, and Raipur, which have been largely influenced by the neighbouring Marāṭhī. They are the following :—

Name of dialect.	No. of speakers.
Hal ^a bi	104,971
Bhunjiā	2,000
Nāhari	482
Kamāri	3,743
TOTAL	111,196

If we add the 3,493,858 speakers of Marāṭhī returned in Hyderabad at the Census of 1891, the grand total comes out as follows :—

Berar and Central Provinces	4,072,378
Hyderabad	3,493,858
Hal ^a bi, etc.	111,196
TOTAL	7,677,432

The Marāṭhī spoken in Berar and the Central Provinces is closely related to the form which that language assumes in the Dekhan. The difference between the two forms of speech is slight, and they gradually merge into each other in Buldana.

Pronunciation.—Long vowels, and especially final ones, are very frequently shortened; thus, mī and mī, I; māhi bāy^akō, my wife; māhā and mahā, my.

There is a strong tendency among the lower classes in Berar to substitute ō for ava and avi. Thus, dzōl for dzaval, near; uḍōlā for uḍavilā, squandered.

As in the Konkan, an a is very commonly used where the Dekhan form of the language has an ē, especially in the termination ē of neuter bases, in the suffix ne of the instrumental, and in the future. Thus, asa, so; sāṅgiṭ^ala, it was said; duk^ara, swine; bhukē-na, with hunger; asal, I shall be. In some rustic dialects this short final a is occasionally dropped altogether; thus, tyān, by him, in the so-called Dhan'garī and Gōvārī of Chhindwara.

I is often interchanged with ē and ya; thus, dila, dēlla, and dyalla, given. The ē in such words is probably short. Compare īl, yēl, and vēl, time.

An initial ē is commonly pronounced as a yē, as is also the case in the Konkan; thus, ēk and yēk, one.

The Anunāsika is very commonly dropped, or, occasionally, replaced by an n; thus, karu, to do; tyā-mulē, therefore; dēvā-śin, to God; tun, thou. The same is, however, also the case in the Dekhan and in the Konkan.

The cerebral ḍ, when preceded by a vowel, is pronounced as an r in the so-called Māhārī of Chhindwara. The same is probably also the case in the rustic dialects in other districts. This conclusion is forced upon us by the fact that ḍ in such positions is very commonly confounded with l. Thus, in the so-called Dzhārpī and Kōshṭī of Ellichpur we find forms such as ghōlā, a horse, and in the dialect of the Kuṇ'bīs of Akola ḍ is substituted for l in words such as ḍzavaḍ, near. The cerebral l, which is always distinguished from the corresponding dental sound, is commonly pronounced as a very soft r, and even as a y, in which case it is sometimes almost inaudible. Thus, mālī, mārī, māyī and māī, a gardener. All these facts can only be explained on the assumption that the cerebral l has a sound which is very near to that of a cerebral r, and that the cerebral ḍ after vowels assumes the same sound.

The cerebral ṇ is always changed to n, though ṇ is often retained in writing; thus, kōn, who; pānī, water. It has sometimes been stated that quite the opposite change takes place in Nagpur, every dental n being pronounced as an ṇ. There are, however, no traces of any such peculiarity in the specimens received from the districts.

L and n are continually interchanged in the future tense; thus, mī mārīn and mārīl, I shall strike; tō māran and māral, he will strike.

V is very indistinctly sounded before i, ī, and ē, and it is often dropped altogether. Thus, istō, fire; īs, twenty; yēl, time. This fact accounts for occasional spellings such as Viśvar, God.

Vh occasionally becomes bh; thus, nabhatē and navhatē, it was not.

Nouns.—The substitution of a for ē in neuter bases, together with the tendency to shorten long final vowels, has caused the distinction between the masculine and neuter genders to be weakened. Thus, the word pōr^aga, a child, is constantly used in the sense of 'son.' Mān^asa, men, which is a neuter plural, is frequently combined with an adjective in the masculine gender; thus, tsāng^alē mān^asa, good men, and so on. In the dialect of the Kuṇ'bīs of Akola and Chanda, of the Gōvārs of Chanda and Bhandara, in the Marhēṭī of Balaghat, the Marāṭhī dialect of Raipur, and so on, the masculine and neuter genders are constantly confounded.

The neuter gender is thoroughly preserved only in Marāṭhī and Gujarāṭī, and it will therefore be seen that the dialect of Berar and the Central Provinces in this respect forms a link between those languages and the related forms of speech to the north and east.

The plural is formed as in Standard Marāṭhī. In the oblique form plural, however, hī or ī is often added; thus, bāpāhīs, to fathers; mān^asāi-lē, to men.

The case suffixes are the same as in the Dekhan. The dative, however, is formed by adding lē and not lāin in most of the rustic dialects such as the Kuṇ'bī of Akola and Buldana, the Kumbhārī of Akola and Chhindwara, the Dhan^agarī and Gōvārī of Chhindwara and Chanda, and so on. Thus, bāpā-lē, to the father.

Pronouns.—The case of the agent of the personal pronoun of the second person is tyā, by thee; 'my' is māhā, and 'thy' is tuhā. The usual Dekhan forms, however, also occur; thus, tuā and tvā, by thee; māḍḍha nāv, my name. 'To me' is maḍḍ, maḍḍ-lē, and ma-lē.

The demonstrative pronoun tō, that, is, in most respects, inflected as in the Dekhan. The usual form of the nominative singular feminine is, however, tē as in Old Marāṭhī.

Kāy, what? has an ablative kāvhun or kāhun, why? Kāmhun, why? is a compound meaning 'what having said?'

Verbs.—There is only one conjugation; thus, mī mar^atō, I die; mī mār^atō, I strike; mī mhanⁿ, I shall say; mī karⁿ, I shall do; mī asal, or asⁿ, I shall be, and so on.

The second person singular has usually the same form as the third person; thus, tū āhē, thou art; tū gēlā, thou wentest. Similarly the second person plural of the past tense coincides with the third person; thus, tumhī gēlē, you went; tē gēlē, they went. The ordinary Dekhan forms are, however, also used; thus, tū āhēs, thou art.

The verb substantive is, with the above exceptions, regular. In the first person singular of the present tense, however, we find mī āhō and mī āhē, I am. From the root hō is formed mī vhay, I am, etc. In the past tense vha is interchangeable with hō; thus, tū hōtā or vhatā, thou wast.

The present tense of finite verbs is often formed as in the Dekhan; thus, mī kar^atō, I do; tū kar^atō(s), thou dost; tē kar^atāt, they do. Frequently, however, the second and third persons singular and the third person plural are formed in the same way as in the verb substantive, in which case the verb does not change for gender; thus, tu rāh^atē(s), thou livest; tō yētē, he comes; tō kar^atyē, he does; tē ḍātēt, they go. In Berar a is substituted for ē in the terminations of the second person singular and the third person plural; thus, tū mār^ata, thou striketh; tē mār^atāt, they strike.

In the imperative we may note forms such as ḍāy, go; khāy, eat (Berar); pāhya, see.

The habitual past is often used as an ordinary past. Thus, tō mhanē, he said. The first person singular ends in ō in the only instance which occurs in the materials available; thus, mī niḍzō, I used to sleep. Note forms such as tō ḍāyē-nā, he would not go; tō dēyē-nā, he would not give.

The past tense is formed as in the Dekhan; thus, myā mār^ala, I struck; tyā mār^ala, thou struckest. The third person singular of transitive verbs sometimes ends in an; thus, dhāḍ^alan, sent. Such forms occur in the rustic dialects of Ellichpur, Chhindwara, and Bhandara. The final n in such forms corresponds to n in the Konkan, where we find forms such as sāṅgit^alān, it was said. It has perhaps developed from an Anunāsika. In the Central Provinces, however, it can also be due to the influence of Eastern Hindi.

The past tense of transitive verbs is used in the same way as in the Dekhan, the subject being put in the case of the agent, and the verb agreeing with the object in gender and number or being put in the neuter singular. In some rustic dialects in Chhindwara, Bhandara, and Balaghat, however, the influence of the neighbouring dialects of Eastern Hindi has caused the passive and impersonal constructions to be frequently superseded by the active one, and we find forms such as mī pāp kēlō, I sinned.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

(DEPOSITION OF) RĀM-JĪ, SON OF SŌNĀ-JĪ, OF THE MĀḶĪ CASTE, AGED FORTY-FIVE, A RESIDENT OF SOMTHAN.

I solemnly affirm that about a fortnight ago, on a Friday night, I and my wife and two children were sleeping in the house. At midnight my wife roused me and said,

‘there is a rattling of pots in the house, and footsteps are heard, therefore get up.’ Then I got up and on looking towards the wall I saw a hole in it. I then understood that some one must have broken into the house. There was no light in the house, but there was a match-box beneath my bed. I immediately got hold of it and lighted a match. Then this very accused began to move towards the hole made in the wall. As soon as I saw him, I caught hold of him and holding him by the hand said to him, ‘Ah, thief! where do you go?’ Whereupon there was a great struggle between him and me, and I cried out loudly from within the house. Thereupon my neighbours, Sītārām and Vithōbā, came. In the meantime my wife lighted a lamp and unchained the door from within, and the said neighbours stepped into the house. Then I felt more strength. On the accused being searched five pieces of bodice-cloth were found on him. They are worth three rupees. They are mine and were in the bundle belonging to my wife. The bundle was near the jar-pile by the grinding-mill. Nothing beside this is lost. We three bound the accused by his hands and immediately took him to the Patel and informed him of what had happened. Whereupon the Patel gave the accused in charge of a Chaukidar and a Mahar and in the morning sent him to the police station at Barsī-Takli. I do not know either the village the accused lives in or his name, for he does not belong to our village. I struck a match to light the lamp when I saw the accused at the hole, therefore I could not light the lamp. One can with difficulty go in and out of the hole made in the wall. The iron spike before the Court with which the wall was bored was found by me in the bath-room near the hole.

The dialect of the Kuṇ'bis is, in all essentials, identical with that illustrated in the preceding specimens. The cerebral ḷ is, however, pronounced as a y; thus, kāy, famine; yīy, time. Ava usually becomes ō; thus, ḍōy, ḍōḍ, and ḍāvaḍ, near. The writing of ḍ in the two last forms of this word is probably only an attempt at a correct orthography. The dative ends in lē; thus, mān'sā-lē, to a man. The masculine and neuter genders are sometimes confounded; thus, jē hisā, which part; ḍuk'ra khāt vhatē, the swine were eating. In all essential points, however, the so-called Kuṇ'bī closely agrees with the usual Marāṭhī of Berar, as will be seen from a perusal of the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

To the west of Akola lies the district of Buldana. It has already been mentioned that the western part of the district belongs to the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī. The language of the eastern part, on the other hand, is identical with that spoken in Akola. There is said to be a slight difference between the dialect spoken above the Ghats, called Ghāṭā var-chī Varhāḍī, in the south, and the Ghāṭā khāl-chī Varhāḍī, in the north. No materials are available to illustrate this difference, and it is probably of no importance.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows illustrates the language of the Kuṇ'bis in Melkapur Taluka. The only peculiarity of the dialect is the pronunciation of the cerebral l as y and the use of the dative suffix lē. Thus, ḍōyā, an eye; bāpā-lē, to a father. We may, in addition to this, note the tendency to substitute an ō for ava and avi; thus, ḍzoy and ḍzaray, near; jīn'gī uḍōlī, his property was squandered.

Proceeding towards the east from Buldana we reach the district of Basim, the main language of which is Marāṭhī. The inhabitants maintain that their dialect is much purer than the so-called Varhādī. An inspection of the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will, however, show that this is not the case, and that the dialect of Basim must be classed with the usual Marāṭhī of Berar. Compare forms such as mī āhō, I am; mī māhyā bāpā-kaḍa dzāil, I will go to my father and so forth. The suffix of the dative, on the other hand, is lā as in the Dekhan.

To the east of Basim lies the district of Wun. The principal language of the district is Varhāḍī. In the south it meets with Telugu and Gōṇḍī, but these languages do not appear to have influenced the current Marāṭhī of the district, which closely agrees with the form which that language assumes all over Berar.

I am indebted to Captain W. Haig for an excellent version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the dialect of Wun. It is the only Berar specimen which can be referred to a well-known authority, and it has, therefore, been printed in full.

Marāṭhī is also the principal language of Amraoti. No specimens have been forwarded, but the dialect is certainly identical with that spoken in the neighbouring districts.

The district of Ellichpur is situated to the north of Amraoti and Akola. Varhādī is spoken all over the district. Two smaller dialects, Dzhārpī and Kōshṭī will be separately dealt with below, though they do not materially differ from the principal language of the district. This latter form of speech is the same as that current elsewhere in Berar. The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows represents the language of the higher classes. Note the use of the dative suffix lā in ma-lā, to me, etc.

The Marāṭhī spoken in the rest of the Central Provinces is usually called Nāgpurī, from the head-quarter of the Marāṭhā kingdom of Berar and the Central Provinces. It has already been stated that this form of speech is identical with the dialect of Berar.

The district of Nagpur is situated in the very heart of the Nāgpurī country, and 540,050 speakers have been returned. The numbers have been stated to include speakers of the following dialects, (1) Varhāḍī; (2) Dakh^aṇī; (3) Kōṅkaṇī; (4) Dhan^agarī; (5) Kēwaṭī; (6) Kōshṭī; (7) Kumbhārī, and (8) Māhārī; but in each case the number is reported to be extremely small, and not worth counting. Dakh^aṇī is probably the Dekhan form of Marāṭhī; Kōṅkaṇī may mean any dialect spoken by settlers from the Konkan; Kēwaṭī is a mixed form of speech, based on Baghēli mixed with Marāṭhī. The other dialects mentioned above are also reported from other parts of Berar and the Central Provinces. It will be shown later on that none of them are proper dialects, but only local forms of the Marāṭhī current in the district in which they happen to be spoken.

Of the two Nagpur specimens which follow the first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second the statement of an accused person. They will be found in all essential points to agree with the so-called Varhāḍī illustrated in the preceding pages. Note the frequency with which long vowels are shortened; thus, is, her; ghari, in the house; mi, I. The dative is always formed in s in the specimens; thus, bāpās, to the father. There is, however, no reason for distinguishing the dialect of the specimens from that current in Berar.

Question.—Were you in the service of Chindhu Lodhi in Patgowari ?

Answer.—Yes, for seven or eight months. I left the service in the middle of last Chait (March-April).

Question.—Where did you live when you were in his service ?

Answer.—I used to take my wife with me and live in Chindhu's house. My business was to do the tillage and whatever else the master might ask me to do. When all the crops had been collected and the threshing had begun in the field, then I used to stay day and night on the threshing-floor in order to keep an eye on it, and my wife stayed in the house.

Question.—Did Chindhu sometimes also stay on the threshing-floor ?

Answer.—From time to time he used to sleep there. A small hut had been built of bundles of Kaḍbā grass, in which I was wont to sleep.

Question.—Did Chindhu sleep on the threshing-ground on the 12th March 1898 ?

Answer.—Yes, he did. It was two and a half months ago. On that night I was in the hut, and my wife was in the village, in the house, and not in the field.

Question.—Did Chindhu wear any ornaments on that day when he slept on the threshing-floor ?

Answer.—Chindhu stayed the whole day on the threshing-floor and did not go home for dinner. His mother-in-law came in the evening to call him, but he did not go. He said he was not hungry. He slept that night on the threshing-floor. He wore on his body a gold bracelet and a silver bracelet, and a moon-shaped ear-ring of gold, a waist-string of silver, and a gold ring.

Question.—To whom do these ornaments which have to-day been produced in Court belong?

Answer.—To Chindhu. He had them on his body when he slept.

Question.—How did these ornaments come in your possession?

Answer.—It was a Saturday. I awoke at two o'clock. Chindhu then seemed to be dead. I do not know who killed him. I then took all the ornaments from his body and went away. Somebody had bound Chindhu's feet and neck with a rope, and blood was flowing from his head. This stone was lying near him. I did not cut his ears in order to get his ear-rings. I threw the body in a well and went to my wife. Then I procured a cart and brought her to the village.

Question.—Did you take this cloth from Chindhu's threshing-ground?

Answer.—I had put it under the threshing-floor, and thence I fetched it. This cloth is mine, and my wife had worn it. Her hand was not good (she was in her menses); and therefore there are blood stains. The blood stains on the rope are from the ox. I threw the corpse into the well because I was afraid of being called a murderer. That was also the reason why I hid the ornaments. And I also ran away in order to avoid suspicion.

Between Nagpur and Berar lies the district of Wardha. The principal language is Marāṭhī, closely agreeing with the form which that language assumes in the neighbouring districts.

The specimen which follows has been printed in full because it is the only specimen which has been received in the Mōdī character. Note that the dative ends in lā or s, and the case of the agent usually in nī; thus, ma-lā, to me; mān^asūs, to a man; ārōpī-nī, by the accused. The latter suffix is, of course, originally a plural suffix.

Question.—You have been charged under section 147 with having entered the shop of the complainant and having made a disturbance there. What do you answer to the charge ?

Answer.—On a Wednesday morning, the first day of the Divāli, in the month of Kārtik, I was washing my face, when Māhādēv came and told me that my brother the goldsmith Raghunāth was lying outside the door of the goldsmith Pāṇḍuraṅg. I and Māhādēv therefore went together and saw that Raghunāth had fallen in the street. His head was broken and there was blood on his hand, and there were also scratches on his hand. We made him drink some water, and brought him to himself. Then we fetched the constable Siv Gōvind, and showed him to him. He ordered us to take him (Raghunāth) to the customs' station in Devli. I borrowed a cart from Māhādēv and took him to the station in Devli. Raghunāth has made a complaint in this court against the complainant, and his two sons, and Siv Ratan and others. It is not true that I entered the shop of the complainant and made a disturbance, and I did not raise a stick in order to strike him, nor did I strike Siv Ratan. This is my answer to the question of the court. I do not know where the constable Siv Gōvind and the accused numbers 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7 were at that time.

This statement has been taken down in our presence and hearing, and the statement made by the accused has here been properly written.

Marāṭhī is also the principal language of the north-western part of Chanda. The local dialect is, in some places, called Jhārī, i.e. jungle-language. Jhārī, or forest-country, is the name used to denote the north of Bhandara, Balaghat, and the Chhattisgarh country. Four thousand five hundred and fifty settlers from Berar have further been reported to speak Varhādī. It may safely be assumed that all these names denote one and the same form of speech.

The dialect of Chanda does not share all the characteristics of the neighbouring districts. Thus, we do not find forms such as dēlla, given; māhā, my; tyāhīs, to them. On the whole, however, the short specimen which follows will show that there can be no doubt about its classification as a form of the usual Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A man had two small children, a boy and a girl. The boy was very pretty, the girl had an ordinary kind of face. One day both children were playing near a looking glass, and the boy said to the girl, 'come let us look at ourselves in the glass, to see which is the prettier.' The girl thought this to be malicious, and that her brother proposed to do so in order to humiliate her. She went to her father and complained of her brother, and said, 'father, to be fond of looking at one's face in the glass is the business of women, and men should not put their mind to such things.' The father embraced both and satisfied them. He said, 'children, don't quarrel. Both look in the glass in the future.'

The girl said, 'father, Sōmā, the milkman, has brought the milk, and he asks how much we want.' The father said, 'my daughter, tell him that one seer will do to-day and ask him to bring two seers to-morrow.' The daughter said, 'father, where does the milkman get the milk from?' The father answered, 'Don't you know that? He has got cows and buffaloes in his house, and he milks them, and so gets the milk.' Says the daughter, 'father, how much milk does a cow give?' Answers the father, 'each cow gives two seers milk, and each she-buffalo four.'

In Bhandara, Nāgpurī is the principal language. A considerable proportion of the population, however, also speak Rājasthānī, Bundēlī, Gōṇḍī, and other aboriginal dialects.

The Marāṭhī of Bhandara is essentially the same as that current in Nagpur, as will be seen from a perusal of the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

In Balaghat Marāṭhī is spoken all over the southern part of the district, mostly side by side with Eastern Hindī, Marārī, and Gōṇḍī.

The lower classes use a mixed form of speech, locally known as Marhēṭī. This dialect will be separately dealt with below. See pp. 304 and ff.

The language of the upper classes, on the other hand, is pure Nāgpurī. We are not in a position to decide how many speakers are to be assigned to it. The local returns give the language of both as Marāṭhī.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be sufficient to illustrate the language of the upper classes. It has been forwarded as representing the dialect of the women. It will, however, be seen that it is nothing else than ordinary Nāgpurī.

Marāṭhī is also spoken in the southern part of Seoni and Chhindwara, below the hills. It is the usual Nāgpurī form of the language, and it is not necessary to give any specimens.

In Raipur, Marāṭhī is spoken in villages to the south of Nandgaon. The dialect is essentially identical with Nāgpurī, though there are some traces of the influence of the neighbouring Chhattisgarhī. Compare khāy-chī man'shā, desire to eat; khēt, field. The neuter gender is on the point of disappearing. Compare dōn lēk'rā (neuter) hōtē (masc.), two sons were. The occasional writing of a cerebral ṇ is only a learned orthography, and does not represent a different pronunciation.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be sufficient to illustrate this form of speech.

DHAN¹GARĪ.

One thousand eight hundred individuals in Chhindwara have been reported as speaking Dhan¹garī, i.e. 'shepherds' language.' The specimens which follow will, however, show that this dialect is nothing but the usual form of Marāṭhī current in the Central Provinces. The Dative takes the suffix lē as in Betul; thus, mān¹sā-lē, to a man.

The only peculiarity of the so-called Dhan¹garī is a tendency to drop the final a which corresponds to ē in Standard Marāṭhī. Thus, we find tyān, by him; sagaḷ dhan, all property, and so on. This tendency is, however, also found among the Dhan¹gars of the Bombay Presidency; see above, p. 97.

Note also the polite forms of the imperative yē-dzō, please come; pāhē-dzō, please look; the imperfect bas¹lēt, were sitting; the third person plural of the present tense, khātē, they eat; dzātēt, they go, etc.

On the whole, however, the Dhan¹garī agrees with the Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces, just as the Dhangars of the Konkan speak the language of their own neighbours. Compare pp. 97 and ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A shepherd once went to graze his sheep, and he said to his daughter-in-law, 'come out and bring me bread.' At noon she had quite forgotten all about the bread. Now a peasant was driving his plough in a field (close by). The shepherd went to him and said, 'my sheep are lying under that mango-tree. Please keep an eye on them while I go home to eat.' He then went away to get something to eat, and when he came back his sheep were still on the same spot. He then took them out to graze.

DZHĀRPĪ DIALECT.

This dialect has been returned as spoken by 5,000 people in Ellichpur. It is essentially identical with the ordinary Marāṭhī of the district. A peculiarity of the dialect is the substitution of a cerebral l for a cerebral ḍ when preceded by a vowel. Thus, ghōlā, a horse ; vāhalē, Standard vāḍhē, he served. Occasionally, however, we find forms such as dhāḍlan, it was sent. The genuine cerebral l is commonly pronounced as r ; thus, kār, famine ; īr, time, and the l, which is substituted for ḍ, is probably pronounced in a similar way. Thus, the name of the dialect is often given as Jhāḍpī.

In other respects the dialect calls for few remarks. Note forms such as rākhāvālē, in order to tend ; dhāḍlan, it was sent.

Two specimens have been received. The first, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, has not been printed in full. The second, a local form of the famous tale of Gōpichandra, contains poetical forms such as bārā, to my child ; ghēūnī, having taken, and also some Eastern Hindī forms, such as bāl, hair ; Gōpichandan, oblique form of Gōpichanda, etc. On the whole, however, it closely agrees with the dialect of the first specimen.

Thy bathing-for new jar-of water.’

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

The golden haired king Gōpichanda mounted his horse, which was swift like the lightning. He put on a robe and earrings in his ears. He went and became the disciple of an ascetic. Said Maināvantī, his mother, 'Do not renounce the world. To whom shall I then give the kingdom over wide Bengal?'

Gōpichanda went into the forest. His subjects cried bitterly, but no tears came in Maināvantī's eyes. Gōpichanda went into the forest. His subjects felt grief in their minds, but Maināvantī became happy at heart. 'I will let my child Gōpichanda renounce the world,' she thought, 'and then I will myself wield the sceptre of wide Bengal.'

'Do not weep, do not pine, sister Champhāvantī. King Gōpichanda has renounced the world.'

Said his sister Champhāvan, 'O my brother Gōpichanda, the Pōḷā¹ festival has come. Who will serve food to the bullocks?'

'O my brother Gōpichanda, the festival of the Āśvin month has come. Who will place me on my seat except my Kāśī?'

'O Gōpichanda, my brother; the Dīvālī festival has come. Who will send me to the husband's house, except the good friend?'

Twelve years of Gōpichanda's youth passed. Rings were put into the braided hair of his sister Champhāvantī.

'O my brother Gōpichanda, you are now twelve years of age. Who will give you water for your bathing?'

Said Gōpichanda, 'my age is twelve years; my queen is two and a half, and she will give me water for my bathing.'

'O my brother Gōpichanda, your youth is delicate, and you get water for your bathing from a new jar.'

GŌVĀRI.

The Gōvārs or cowherds are often stated to speak a separate dialect, called Gōvārī. In reality, however, no such form of speech exists. The Gōvārs of Hoshangabad speak Bundēli, in Chhindwara and Chanda they speak the usual Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces, and in Bhandara some of them speak Bundēli and others Marāṭhī. The estimated number of Marāṭhī-speaking Gōvārs is as follows:—

Chhindwara	2,000
Chanda	500
Bhandara	150
															TOTAL	2,650

No specimens have been received from Chanda. There cannot, however, be any doubt that the Gōvārs speak the ordinary Marāṭhī current in the district.

The so-called Gōvārī of Chhindwara is the usual Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces, with very few peculiarities.

The final a in strong neuter bases, in the case of the agent, and in verbal forms, corresponding to ē in Standard Marāṭhī, is often dropped; thus tyān, by him, pōṭ bharāv, the belly should be filled; bhukan, with hunger. Similarly also sāman, Standard sām^anē, before.

Ē is sometimes substituted for i, and ō for u; thus, dēll and dīla, given; tōhā, thy. In it^akē vars dzhālē, so many years have past, vars has become masculine, the influence of the neighbouring Bundēlī having occasioned the disappearance of the neuter gender. In tyān tē sarv dhan vāṭūn dēllī, him-by that all property having-divided was given, the verb is put in the feminine though the qualified noun is neuter. A similar confusion seems to occur in hyā pōryā, this son, where hyā apparently is the neuter form hē; compare pāhē, see.

Ā corresponds to Standard Marāṭhī ē in forms such as bhukan, with hunger; tyā vēlas, at that time; rāh^alas, thou livest.

The cerebral ṇ is very irregularly used; thus, mhaṇ^ala and mhan^ala, it was said. It is probably always pronounced as a dental n.

The cerebral l is regularly used. The only exception is kāl, famine, which seems to be a Hindī loan-word.

Characteristic words occurring in the specimen are tut, thou; tutyā, i.e., tuckyā, thy (oblique); tē khātē, they eat.

The Gōvārs in the Bundēlī-speaking tract of Chhindwara speak Bundēlī, and some of the irregularities mentioned above are perhaps due to intercourse with them. On the whole, however, the specimen which follows will be seen to agree with the usual Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces.

It has already been remarked that some of the Gōvārs of Bhandara speak Bundēli and others Marāṭhī. During the preliminary operations of this Survey, 150 of them were reported to speak a separate dialect. The specimen printed below will show that this dialect is in reality the usual Marāṭhī of the district. It is, however, not an unmixed form of speech, but has been influenced by the various broken dialects of the neighbourhood.

The Anunāsika is usually dropped; thus, ātā, now; tavhā, then. Sometimes, however, it is preserved or changed to n; thus, ātā, now; karūn, we shall make.

The cerebral n is very irregularly used; thus, mān^asā-lē, to a man; pānī, water.

The cerebral ḷ is always distinguished from the corresponding dental sound. It is pronounced as everywhere in the Central Provinces; thus, ḍavaḷ and ḍavar, near; mīr^alā, he was found.

The neuter gender is constantly confounded with the masculine; thus, hā kā āhē, what is this? it^alē varsā ḍhālē, so many years passed; āp^alā kāmā-ts, our business.

The dative takes the suffix lē; thus, bāpā-lē, to a father. 'To him' is tyā-lā and tyā-lē; 'their' tyāhi-tsā. The suffix of the agent-instrumental is nē or na; thus, bhukē-nē, with hunger; bāpā-na, by the father.

The verb substantive is āhā and āhō, I am; āhē and āhēs, thou art; āhē and āhēt, they are, etc.

The present tense of finite verbs is usually formed as in the common Marāṭhī of the district; thus, mī mar^atō, I die; tē mār^atē(t), they strike. Irregular forms are mī ḍātū, I go; mī mār^atā, I strike; āmhi ḍāhun, we go. The final n of the latter form is probably for the Anunāsika.

The past tense of intransitive verbs is regular. Mī ālun, I have come, stands for mī ālō. Mī gēlā, I went, is apparently a perfect.

The past tense of transitive verbs is sometimes regularly formed; thus, tyā-nē vāṭhā karūn dēlā, him-by division having-made was given. The first person singular, however, ends in lō, the third person singular often in lan, and the first person plural in lū; thus, mī pāp kēlō, I did sin; tyā-na tyā-lē dhāḍ^alan, him-by him it-was-sent; āmhi mār^alū, we struck; āp^alī sampat khōūn dēllan, he squandered his property. It will be seen that the construction is sometimes active, and there is a distinct tendency to disregard the difference between the two conjugations. Thus we also find tō gēlan, he went.

Forms such as mī asūn, I shall be, I may be; mī mārūn, I should strike, which are reported to exist, do not occur in the specimen.

In other respects the dialect will be seen to agree with the usual Marāṭhī of the district.

KŌSHṬĪ DIALECT.

This is the dialect of the Kōshṭīs or weavers of Berar. It has been reported as a separate dialect from Akola, Ellichpur and Buldana. The following are the revised figures returned for the purposes of this Survey :—

Akola	300
Ellichpur	500
Buldana	2,100
TOTAL	2,900

No specimens have been received from Buldana, but there is no reason to suppose that the dialect of the weavers in that district differs from that of the rest of the population.

The dialect of the Kōshṭīs of Akola is merely the ordinary Marāṭhī of the district, as will be seen from a perusal of the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows :—

In Ellichpur the so-called Kōshṭī is identical with the so-called Raṅgārī, the dialect of the Raṅgāris or dyers. Each has been reported to be spoken by 250 individuals. Neither of them is a separate dialect, but only the ordinary Marāṭhī spoken by the lower classes in the district. As in the so-called Dzhārpī, a cerebral ḍ between vowels is pronounced as l; thus, ghōlā, a horse. The cerebral l has been transliterated as l, y, and ḍ; thus, ḍōlā and ḍōyā, an eye; ḍzōl and ḍzōḍ, near. It must be inferred that the pronunciation of ḍ does not materially differ from that of l. Occasionally we also find forms such as paḍ^alā, he fell, where the ḍ has been preserved. Ava and avi are pronounced as ō, as is also the case in the so-called Kuṇ^abī of Buldana and other vulgar forms of speech. Thus, ḍzōl, near; samda dhan uḍōla, all his property was wasted.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will, however, be sufficient to show that the so-called Kōshṭī of Ellichpur is not different from the ordinary Marāṭhī of the district.

KUMBHĀRĪ.

The potters of Berar and the Central Provinces have been reported to speak a separate dialect called Kumbhārī, i.e. potters' language. The following are the revised figures:—

Buldana	580
Chhindwara	4,400
Chanda	1,000
												TOTAL	10,510

The specimens forwarded from the districts show that the Kumbhārī dialect is a mere fiction. The Kumbhārs of Akola speak the ordinary Marāṭhī of Berar, while those of Buldana use a form of Bundēli. In Chhindwara some of them speak Bundēli and others the usual Marāṭhī dialect of the Central Provinces. The potters of Chanda are now reported to speak Kōmṭāū, a broken dialect of Telugu, and the Kumbhārī of Bhandara is a broken form of Baghēli.

In this place we have only to deal with the Marāṭhī speaking Kumbhārs of Akola and Chhindwara. The dialects of the others will be described in their proper places.

The Kumbhārī of Akola is identical with the form of Marāṭhī spoken by the Kun^abīs and others in the district, as will be seen from the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

The Kumbhārs of Chhindwara speak, some Bundēli, and some Marāṭhī. It is not possible to decide how many of the 4,400 speakers should be assigned to each language, and the whole total has, therefore, been put down as belonging to Bundēli. See Vol. IX, Part I.

The Marāṭhī dialect of Kumbhārī in Chhindwara is identical with other Marāṭhī dialects of the neighbourhood, such as Dhan^agarī, Gōvārī, etc., and the first lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follow will show that it is in reality only a form of Nāgpurī.

MĀHĀRĪ.

The Mahārs are a low caste employed mostly as village-watchmen, gate-keepers, messengers, guides, porters, etc. They are often also called Parvāris and Dhēds, and their dialect has been returned as Māhārī or Dhēdī. In reality, however, the Mahārs everywhere speak the dialect of their neighbourhood. The Mahārs of Thana thus use the current Marāṭhī of the Konkan, and the dialect of the Mahārs of Bastar is the common Hal^abī of the district. See pp. 157 and ff., and 351 and ff.

Māhārī has been returned from Chhindwara and Chanda. The revised figures are as follows :—

Chhindwara	9,000
												19,000
TOTAL												19,000

The Māhārī of Chhindwara is, in all essential points, identical with the usual Marāṭhī dialects of the district. Compare forms such as istū, fire; īs, twenty; ḍōrē, eyes, pānī, water; mī asal, I shall be; tō mārīn, he will strike. The cerebral ḍ between vowels is pronounced as a cerebral r; thus, par^alā, he fell. Note forms such as mār^atan, they kill; mān^asā-na tyā-lē tēv^alan, the man kept him; uṭh^alōn, he arose. Transitive verbs sometimes use the active construction in the past tense; thus, mī tuhī tṣāk^arī kēlō, I did thy service.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show that such peculiarities are not of sufficient importance to change the general character of the Māhārī of Chhindwara.

The dialect of the Mahārs of Chanda is still more closely connected with the current Marāṭhī of the district. There is the same tendency as in Natakānī to confound the genders; thus, sampat dēlhā, property was given; dōgghē lek^ara hōtē, two sons (lit. children) were. Note also forms such as mōllā, for mōḍ^alā, broken, in tud^ghā hukam kadhī mōllā nāhē, thy command was never broken.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be sufficient to show the general character of this dialect.

MARHĒṬĪ.

Marāṭhī is spoken in the southern part of Balaghat. The number of speakers has been estimated at 98,700.

The higher classes speak the same dialect as that current in Nagpur,—see p. 267 above. The lower classes, on the other hand, use a mixed form of speech, which is locally known as Marhēṭī, where the neighbouring dialects of Eastern Hindī have, to some extent, influenced the language.

The pronunciation apparently mainly agrees with the dialects of Berar and Nagpur. Thus, the cerebral ḷ is always distinguished from the dental one, and it sounds like an r; thus, yēr, time; yēr, a trinket; javar, near. Ṇ becomes n; thus, man^alā, he said. ṽ is dropped before i, ī, and ē; thus, irudh, against; yēr, Marāṭhī vēḷ, a kind of ornament worn on the elbow, and so on.

In some respects, however, the pronunciation of Marhēṭī differs. The pronunciation of the palatals is the same as in Hindī; thus, chākar, a servant; javar, near. The cerebral ḍ after vowels is given as ṛ in the second specimen; thus, jhār, a tree. In the Parable we find ḍ; thus, paḍ^alā, he fell. The pronunciation of aspirated letters does not seem to be very marked. Compare man^alā, he said; ḍōb^anī, a pool, Standard Marāṭhī ḍōbhan.

The neuter gender is constantly confounded with the masculine. Thus, chāṅg^alā pāṅgh^arūn, a good cloth; jō kāhī mājhā āhē tō tujhā āhē, whatever is mine that is thine; āp^alā pōṭ bharāvā, his belly should be filled. In dōn lēk^arā hōtē, two sons were, lēk^arā is the neuter plural, Standard Marāṭhī lēk^arē, but it is treated as a masculine, and hōtē is the third person plural masculine. The confusion between the two genders is especially apparent in the demonstrative pronouns. Thus, we find hē bhāu, this brother; hā kā hōy, what is this? There are, however, some traces of the ordinary Marāṭhī neuter; thus, dhan dīlē, property was given; (ḍōs^akā) uph^alē nakō, (the head) should not float up.

The case suffixes are the same as in Nagpur. In the dative we find both lā and lē; thus, pōryā-lā and pōrā-lē, to the son. Note also jhāḍā-var-nā, from on the tree; dōhī hātā-nā, with both hands; tyāsnī and tyā-sīn, to him, etc.

The inflection of verbs is, on the whole, regular. In the past tense of transitive verbs, however, the verb usually agrees with the subject, though the subject is often put in the agent. Thus, mī pāp kēlō, I did sin; bāpā-nē dayā kēlā, the father made compassion; mī tyā-lē khāl^atā pālō (i.e. pāḍ^alō), I knocked him down. The regular passive construction, however, apparently also occurs; thus, tumhī pāṭh^arū bhī nāhī dīlā, by-thee a-kid even not was-given; tyā-nī dhan dīlē, he gave his property; (mī) garā mur^aḍūn dēlā, I wrung his neck.

The future manīn, I will say, also occurs in Nagpur; jāhīn, I will go, is probably written for jāīn.

To the influence of Eastern Hindī are due forms such as bhukā, hungry; chālā, gone; pāṅgh^arāv, put on, etc.

Note also the form mānāvī, i.e. mānāvē in mā-lā āp^alē maj^adurā-sār^akhē mānāvī, consider me as your servant.

The two specimens which follow will, when the preceding remarks are borne in mind, present no difficulty to the student.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I took that boy with me to eat jāmun-fruit. I went and climbed a big tree, and the boy stood under the tree. I threw the fruits down from above, and the boy ate some of them and put others by. Then I descended from the tree and went with the boy towards the house. When I came to a big tank, I seized the boy's neck with both hands and knocked him down. Then I put my knee on his neck and wrung it, and the boy gurgled and died. After he had died I took two ear-rings from his ears and three trinkets from his hands and put them in my waistband. Then I lifted the boy and threw him into the pool, and pressed his head down into the mud in order that it should not float up. After that I went home. Then a Kalār (liquor-merchant) came to my house and took me to a liquor-shop. There the boy's father came to make enquiries, and he asked me, 'my boy went with you to eat jāmun-fruit; where has he gone?' I answered that I did not know. Then many men gathered and went together to the tank and found the boy. In the meantime I had run to my house. Then I hid for a day in the courtyard of a Mahār. The next day I went and stayed for three days in Mandla, and there the police caught me.

NATAKĀNĪ.

This dialect is spoken by about 180 individuals in the Sironeha Tahsil of the Chanda district, the principal language of which is Telugu. Its base is the common Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces. The influence of the prevailing language of the neighbourhood has, however, to some extent changed the character of the dialect, so that it must be considered as a broken form of speech.

Short a is often pronounced as an open o, and ō is sometimes written instead ; thus, mōṇṭ^olōn and maṇṭ^olan, it was said ; na-kō and nō-kō, it is not proper.

Long vowels are constantly shortened ; thus, mi, I ; ti, she ; tyā-cha bāp, his father.

It has not been possible to ascertain how the palatals are pronounced. They have, therefore, been transliterated as ch, j, etc., throughout.

Aspirated letters very commonly lose their aspiration. Thus, mājā and mājhā, my.

The various genders are no longer correctly distinguished. Thus, we find tyā-lē dayā ālā, him-to pity came ; tyā-lē rāg āli, him-to anger came.

There are no instances of the relative pronoun, participles being apparently used instead ; thus, ḍuk^rrā khāllā pōtu-nē, swine eaten husks-with, with the husks which the swine ate ; tū sāṅ^olāsa aikat, thou said-such hearing, hearing what you said.

In the inflection of verbs it should be noted that several forms end in n ; thus, mi jātan and jyātō, I go ; mi mantōn, I say ; tujhā bhāū ālan, thy brother has come ; māhag pad^olan, a famine arose.

The past tense of transitive verbs only occurs in the neuter form ending in lan ; thus, mi pāp kēlan, I did sin ; mi vāṭ pāh^olan, I looked at the way ; tū pilu nahi dēlan, thou didst not give a kid ; tō (and tyā-na) maṇṭ^olan, he said, and so forth.

Note also forms such as khāunu, we should eat ; rāhunu and rāhun, we should remain ; pāyē, see ; jyāy, go. The final u in khāunu, etc., is due to the influence of Telugu.

The general character of the dialect will be seen from the specimens which follow.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain village there lived a boy called Virappā. One day his father gave him a basket full of vegetables and asked him to carry it to his friend. Virappā took the basket on his head, went to Abhirāmammā and gave it to her. She took the vegetables and said, 'my dear Virappā, I have been on the look-out for you for many days. I have a good reward for you.' Virappā said, 'my lady, what is that?' She said, 'some days ago you asked for two Gōrvaṅka birds. Don't you remember?' Then he said that he did remember, and asked where they were. 'Look here, the two birds are in this cage,' she said, 'one of them is for you and the other for your brother. Go carefully home, and don't be slow on the road. Keep the cage closed till you are at home.' Now Virappā went happy away and said to his friend, 'two good birds are in this cage.'

KATIA OR KATIYĀĪ.

The Katiās are an important caste of weavers and village watchmen in the Central Provinces. At the census of 1891 their number was returned as 43,940. In 1901, the number was 31,924. They were found mainly on the Satpuras and in Hoshangabad. In the latter district and in Seoni and Chhindwara they number over 2 per cent. of the population.

The Katiās probably all speak the dialect of their neighbours. According to the information collected for the use of the Linguistic Survey there is, however, a separate form of speech called Katiyāī in Chhindwara and Katiā in Narsinghpur. The number of speakers has been estimated as follows :—

Specimens have been forwarded from both districts, and they show that the dialect in question is a mechanical mixture of Marāṭhī and Hindī. The phonetical system is Hindī, and not Marāṭhī. This latter language has, however, so largely influenced the inflection of nouns and verbs, that the dialect must now be classed as Marāṭhī rather than Hindī, especially in Chhindwara.

The case suffixes are partly Marāṭhī and partly Hindī; thus, ghōryā-chā, of a horse; jhāḍ-kē, of a tree; gharī, gharāt, and ghar-mē, in the house; kis^abanō-chē sāth, in company with harlots.

The same is the case with the personal pronouns, thus, mē, mī and maĩ, I; mē-nē, by my; mājhā and māhā, my; ham and āmhī, we; tyā-nē and tā-nē, by him; tis-mē-sē and tin-mē-sē, from among them; tēn-chā, their, etc. In Narsinghpur jō and jab are often demonstratives, meaning 'that,' 'then,' respectively. Compare Bundēli.

The verb substantive usually takes the Marāṭhī form; thus, āhē, he is; hōtē, they were. Occasionally, however, we also find forms such as hai, he is; thā, he was.

The past tense of finite verbs is usually formed by adding an l-suffix; thus, gēlā, he went; kar^alē, I did; kēlā, he did. A common form of the third person singular in Chhindwara ends in an or tan; thus, bōlan, he said; karan, he did; dētan, and once dētam, he gave, etc.

It would, however, be waste of space and paper to go into details. The mixed nature of the dialect will be seen from the specimens which follow.

BROKEN DIALECTS OF THE EAST.

In the eastern part of the Central Provinces Marāṭhī is surrounded by Chhattisgarhī and other dialects of Eastern Hindi in the north, and by Gōṇḍī and other aboriginal forms of speech in the south. There are no intermediary dialects connecting Marāṭhī with any of these dialects.

Farther to the east we find another Aryan language, Oṛiyā. A dialect of this language, Bhatrī, is spoken in the Bastar State, and forms a kind of connecting link between Oṛiyā and the language of the central portion of Bastar. This latter is known as Hal^abī, and is a curious mixture of Oṛiyā, Chhattisgarhī, and Marāṭhī. Some minor dialects in Raipur and Kanker, such as Bhunjā, Nāharī, and Kamārī, have several points of analogy with Hal^abī, of which language the two former may be considered as sub-dialects. The revised figures for all these forms of speech are as follows :—

Bhunjā	2,000
Nāharī	482
Kamārī	3,743
TOTAL	111,196

These dialects are the only one which can claim to be intermediary between Marāṭhī and Oṛiyā. The remarks which follow will, however, show that they are not organic links, but merely mechanical mixtures of all the Aryan languages which meet in the eastern part of the Central Provinces.

HAL^aBĪ.

The Halbas are one of the principal tribes of the Bastar and Kanker States. In Bastar they are chiefly found in the central part of the district, from the eastern frontier westwards. They are also found in the north-west, on the frontier towards Kanker, and farther into this latter State. Halbas have also settled in Bhandara, the eastern portion of Chanda, and Raipur.

Outside the Central Provinces Halbas were returned at the Census of 1891 from the Jeypore zamindari of Madras (1,887) and from Berar (2,841). In Madras they are classed as a sub-division of the Gōṇḍs. In Berar they are weavers, and most of them are found in Ellichpur.

Hal^abī, the dialect of the Halbas, has only been returned for this Survey from the Central Provinces. A specimen has, however, been forwarded from Berar. It differs from the other Hal^abī specimens, and it will therefore be separately dealt with.

Bastar	96,181
Kanker	5,000
Chanda	3,500
Bhandara	150
Raipur	140
TOTAL	104,971

Of the 96,181 speakers returned from Bastar 17,387 have been reported to speak Mah^arī. This dialect has, however, proved to be identical with Hal^abī. It is probably the dialect returned as Mēharī in the 1891 Census Report. According to the same authority the Hal^abī of Bastar comprises several minor dialects, Adkuri, Bastarī, Chandārī, Gachikolo, Mēharī, Mirgānī, Muria, and Śunḍī. No information is available with regard to these so-called dialects. Bastarī simply means the language of Bastar, and of the 3,500 speakers of Hal^abī returned from Chanda 1,300 have been stated to speak Bastarī and not Hal^abī. Mēharī is the language of the low-caste Mēhars or Mahārs. The Murias or Marias are mentioned by Colonel Glasfurd in his Papers relating to the Dependency of Bustar...Selections from the Records of the Government of India, Foreign Department. No. xxxix. Calcutta, 1863, p. 37. They inhabit the more cultivated plains around Jagdalpur, in the heart of the Hal^abī district and live as cultivators. Most of them speak a Gōṇḍ dialect. The Śunḍīs are spirit-dealers. It may safely be assumed that none of the names mentioned above connotes any separate dialect.

The Halbas have hitherto been considered to be a sub-division of the Gōṇḍs. The Superintendent of Census Operations in the Central Provinces states that the ethnographic information received about them is to the effect that the caste were originally house servants of the Oṛiyā Rajas. Their sections are partly totemistic, but include the names of two or three Oṛiyā castes. The Halbas of Raipur are looked upon and consider themselves as of Gōṇḍ descent. In Bhandara, on the other hand, they say that they have come from Warangal in Hyderabad and disclaim any connection with the Gōṇḍs.

Linguistic evidence also points to the conclusion that the Halbas are an aboriginal tribe who have adopted Hinduism and an Aryan language.

Their dialect is a curious mixture of Oṛiyā, Chhattisgarhī, and Marāṭhī. In Bhandara it has been so much influenced by the current language of the district that it must now be classed as ordinary Marāṭhī and not as Hal^abī. No specimens have been received from Chanda and Raipur, and the remarks on Hal^abī grammar which follow are, therefore, based on the specimens forwarded from Bastar and Kanker.

Colonel C. L. R. Glasfurd, in his Papers relating to the Dependency of Bustar, quoted above, pp. 46 and f., describes it as follows :—

'The first [i.e. Hal^abī] closely resembles the Chuteesghirree dialect. There is a great admixture of Muratha in it, or rather, I should say, there are many Muratha affixes, and it often happens that a pure Hindostanee word is taken and a Muratha termination added; thus the Mooreas around the Jugdulpore say mī daklō nahī, I did not see. Here we have the pronoun Muratha and the verb, a Hindostanee word, put in the past tense of the Muratha declension of verbs. In fact, the whole language in this part of the country is a horrid jargon of Muratha and Hindue words; grammar and idioms all jumbled up into indescribable confusion. It is spoken by the Hulbas and Mooreas, and may be said to be subdivided into the Pnrja or Tugara and Bhuttra dialects. It is spoken by all in Jugdulpore, from the Rajah to the lowest of his subjects.'

A short vocabulary of Bhuttra or Purja has been printed in Appendix II, pp. 91 and ff., of the same publication. It has not, however, anything to do with Hal^abī.

Pronunciation.—The short a is probably often pronounced as an o, and a and ō are therefore sometimes interchangeable; thus, ballō and bōllō, he said; ma-kē and mō-kē, to me. Similarly ai interchanges with ui; thus, mai and mui, I; bailā and builā, an ox. Compare also būbā and bābā, a father.

E is always marked as long. It is however probably short in words such as ebē, now; compare abē and ibe.

ai and ē, au and ō, respectively, are sometimes interchanged; thus, maĩ and mē, I; gailō and gēlō, he went; kaunĩ and kōnĩ, somebody.

The Anunāsika is very faintly sounded, and its use is rather irregular. Thus we find hũn and hun, he; jānē and jānē, I know.

The palatals are pronounced as in Hindī, and not as in Marāthī; thus, mō-chō, my; puchhālō, he asked. Chh seems, however, to be occasionally pronounced as s, for in the specimens received as illustrating the Mahārī dialect we find chhām^{nē}, in the presence of.

The cerebral ḍ between vowels has usually the Marāthī sound of ḍ, but is sometimes also pronounced r as in Chhattisgarhī; thus, baḍē dukāl paḍālī, a great famine arose; kap^{rā}, cloth. The pronunciation as r seems to be more used in the so-called Mahārī than in Hal^{bī} proper.

The cerebral ṇ has become dental as in the Marāthī of the Central Provinces and in Chhattisgarhī; thus, kōnĩ, somebody.

The cerebral l sometimes becomes r; thus, parā, run; bērā, at the time; pōrā, the Pōlā festival. It is impossible to decide whether this pronunciation is due to the influence of Hindī or to that of the Marāthī of the Central Provinces. Compare Hindī bēr, Marāthī yēr, time; Hindī parānā, Marāthī paḷ^{nē}, to run. In most cases, however, a dental l corresponds to Marāthī l; thus mīlētē, it will be got; dukāl, famine.

Hal^{bī} uses b like Hindī, Oṛiyā, etc., where Marāthī has v; thus, bēr, Marāthī vēl or yēr, time; bīs, Marāthī vīs or īs, twenty.

The cerebral śh is pronounced as kh; thus manukh, a man.

Initial h has a rather faint sound. Compare hūt and hūt, a camel; ham and am, we; un and hun, he.

Note pēj^apānī instead of mēj^amānī, feast.

On the whole it will be seen that the pronunciation has more in common with Chhattisgarhī than with Marāthī.

Nouns.—Bitā, a person, is sometimes used as a kind of definite article. Thus, bāp-bitā, the father; bētā-bitā-kē, to the son.

Gender.—There are only two genders, the masculine and the feminine, the former also corresponding to the neuter gender of Marāthī; thus, lēkā, a child, a son.

Number.—The plural is formed as in Chhattisgarhī by adding man; thus, bābā-man, fathers. Often, however, no sign of the plural is added, or plurality is indicated by adding some word meaning 'many,' 'all,' etc. Thus, hun and hun-man, they; naukar sabō-kē, to the servants; khubē ghōḍā, horses; jugē ghōḍā, horses.

Case.—There is no oblique form, case suffixes being added immediately to the base, as is also the case in Chhattisgarhī and Oṛiyā. In one instance we find an oblique plural formed by adding in; thus, bhuti-yār-in-chō, of the servants. Compare Chhattisgarhī an.

The usual case suffixes are as follows :—

Dat.	kē .
Abl.	lē , lagē-lē .
Gen.	chō , kē .
Loc.	mē , nē .

Of these only the genitive suffix chō agrees with Marāṭhī tsā, chī, chē. The dative suffix kē corresponds to Chhattisgarhī kā; compare Mālwi and Bihārī kē. The ablative suffix lē and the genitive suffix kē correspond to Chhattisgarhī le and ke respectively, while the locative suffix mē must be compared with Chhattisgarhī mā, Awadhī and Bihārī mē.

There is no proper instrumental. Thus, 'with ropes' is translated ḍōrī-saṅgē; 'with a stick' is baḍ'gī-mē. In Kanker we occasionally find a suffix nē denoting the agent. It is added to the subject of intransitive as well as of transitive verbs, and it is clearly only an unorganic loan from Marāṭhī or Hindī. Thus, musā-nē nariālō sun'ālō, the mouse heard the cry; bāgh-nē phāndō-sē nik'lan rah'ālō, the tiger was getting out of the net.

Instead of the dative suffix kē the Kanker specimens sometimes use kō; thus, bāp-kē, to the father; bāgh-kō, to the tiger. Final ē and ō are also often interchanged; compare ablative, genitive, and verbs, below.

In the ablative the Kanker specimens use the suffixes lē, lō, and sē. Thus, bahin-lē, from a sister; phāndō-sē, from the net. Lō occurs in sab-lō uttam, best, and is, perhaps, no real ablative suffix but the Marāṭhī suffix lā in tyāt-lā, from among them, etc. Compare, however, the l-suffix of the ablative in Gōṇḍī and luk, from, in Katiyāī.

The genitive suffix chō does not change for gender and number; thus, Bhag'vān-chō hukum, God's command; tu-chō nāv, thy name; un-chō bahin, his sister; mō-chō bāp-chō khubē bhutī-bitī-man-kē, to many servants of my father's. Occasionally we find chē instead of chō; thus, bāp-chē purē, before the father.

The suffix kē occurs in instances such as ghōḍā-kē pāt-nē, on the back of the horse; nāch-kē gajar, the sound of dancing. In Kanker we also find kā; thus, āp'lō yē-chē dāyā-kā bad'lā, a reward for this your compassion. Here āp'lō corresponds to Marāṭhī āp'lā; yē is Chhattisgarhī, and the suffix chē Marāṭhī; while dāyā-kā is high Hindī. Even Rājāsēkhara, who knew all the Bhāshās, could hardly have succeeded better in mixing various dialects together.

Sometimes also the governed noun is simply put before the governed one, both forming a kind of compound; thus, mō-chō bāp ghar-mē, in my father's house.

The locative suffix nē is perhaps related to Telugu na, Gōṇḍī nē. Thus, pāt-nē, on the back; hunī nānī kuriyā-nē, in that small house.

Adjectives do not change for gender and number; thus, baḍē, or baḍō, bēṭā, the elder son; tu-chō sēvā, thy service; āp'lō dhan, your property.

Numerals.—The numerals will be found in the list of words. They are almost the same as in Chhattisgarhī. Gōṭōk, one, is also used in Bhatrī. Dui, two, corresponds to Bhatrī and Oriyā dui. In Kanker we find the Chhattisgarhī form dō. Chhah, six; das, ten; bīs, twenty; pachās, fifty; sau, hundred, are pure Chhattisgarhī and have nothing to do with Marāṭhī. Note also the addition of ṭhan in dui ṭhan bēṭā, two sons; compare Chhattisgarhī dū-ṭhan, exactly two.

Pronouns.—The following are the personal pronouns :—

muī, muī, mai, mā, mē , I.	tui, tuī, tū , thou.
mō-kē, ma-kē , to me	tu-kē , to thee.
mō-chō, mā-chō , my	tu-chō, tōr , thy.
(h)amī, ham-man , we	tum(ī) , you.
(h)am-chō, (h)amar , our	tum-chō, tamar , your.

The final ī in hamī, tumī, is an emphatic particle. It also occurs in the pronoun hun or hun-ī, that, he. Hun is also written un and is regularly inflected; thus, hun-chō, his; hun-man, they.

Other pronouns are tō, oblique tā, that; yē, this; jē, jō, and jaun, who; kōn, genitive kā-chō, who? kāy, what?

Verbs.—There is only one conjugation, and only the active construction is used. The subject is occasionally put in the agent in the specimens forwarded from Kanker. See Case, above.

Verbs do not change for gender. There is a great variety of forms used without any distinction. Thus, 'he was' is ralā, ralē, ralī, and ralō; 'he had compassion' is translated dayā kar^alē and dayā kar^alō.

A particle nā is often added; thus, tu-chō nāv kāy āyē-nā, what is your name? jāō-nā, go; mui hiṇḍ^alē-nā, I have walked; jāv-nā, let us go; mārēndē-nā, I will strike.

There is a marked tendency to use periphrastic tenses. Thus, the present tense is formed by adding the verb substantive; see below.

The usual present tense of the verb substantive is inflected as follows:—

Singular—1 āsē	Plural—1 āsū .
2 āsīs	2 āsās .
3 āsē	3 āsot .

Other forms are āyē and hāy, I am; āyē and āy, he is.

The present tense will be seen to be more closely related to the usual forms in Marāṭhī than to those used in Chhattisgarhī. The corresponding past tense is formed from the same base as in Chhattisgarhī by adding the l-suffix of Marāṭhī and Oriyā. The terminations of the various persons seem to be borrowed from all these languages. Thus—

Singular—1 ralē and ralī
2 ralā , ralē , ralī .
3 ralō , ralē , ralī , and ralā .
Plural—1 ralē , ralā , and ralō
2 ralās , and ralē .
3 ralē , ralā , ralī , and ralō .

The number of various forms is very great. It is not, however, possible to find any difference in the use of the forms given under each person.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed by adding the verb substantive to the base, or to some participial form; thus, mui piyē^s-sē, I drink; tui mār^sīs, thou strikest; amī mārē^s-sē, we strike; ham jāū^s-sē, we go; hun-man bōl^sat, they say.

The past tense has the same bewildering maze of various forms as in the case of the verb substantive. Thus, mui mār^alē, mār^alī, and mār^alā, I struck; mai tār^alō, I transgressed; mui gēlō, and gēlā, I went; mui hōlē, I became; tui gēlā, and gēlīs, thou wentest; tui mār^alī(s), thou struckest; hun mār^alō, mār^alā, and mār^alē, he struck; lōhū hōlī sē, blood had become (attached); hamī mār^alū, we struck; tumī dēkh^alās, you saw, etc.

Another past tense is formed by adding a b, and not an l-suffix. Thus, maĩ kar^abē-sē, I have done; mō-kē mār^abā-āsāt, they struck me, I am struck. Compare the remarks under the head of participles below.

Solitary forms are balē, he said; rahē, they were; bāchē, it is left; chhōḍēn-thātī, he released; diyō, he gave.

The characteristic sign of the future is dē, or, occasionally, tē; compare the present participle. Thus, maĩ mārēn-dē, I shall strike; bōlan-dē, I will say; hun dē-dē, he will give; ham mārūn-dē, we will strike; hun-man mārēn-dē, or mār-dē, they will strike; milē-tē, it will be got. Sē is sometimes used instead of dē. Thus, maĩ karū-sē, I will do; tui diyā-sē, or dē-sē, thou wilt give; tum mārā-sē, you will strike. In ham mār^avā, we will strike; puchhūvā, we will ask, the v perhaps corresponds to the b-suffix in Bihārī. Dihō, I shall give, on the other hand, is Chhattisgarhī.

The imperative is usually formed without any suffix; thus, bas, sit; jā, go. An honorific imperative is sometimes formed by adding ās; thus, diyās and dēs, give; ānās, bring; mārās, strike. In the second person plural we sometimes find the Marāṭhī form in ā, and sometimes the Chhattisgarhī form in ō; thus, rākhā, keep; dēkhō, see. Forms such as khēlū, let us play; hōlū, let us be, occur in Mahārī.

Participles.—The present participle is sometimes formed as in Chhattisgarhī and sometimes as in Oṛiyā. Thus, karat, doing; jātē, going; tār^atē, transgressing; sōu (ralē), sleeping (he was). Other forms are karandē, doing; mār-dē, striking, and probably also mārē in mārēsē, (I) strike; nikalan (rahalō), (he was) getting out. The past participle sometimes agrees with Marāṭhī and sometimes with Chhattisgarhī; thus, gēlō, gone; padē, fallen; bhukē, hungry; marā, dead; bachā, left. The form mar^abō, dead, corresponds to the past tense formed with a b-suffix. It is perhaps originally a future participle.

The conjunctive participle is commonly formed as in Marāṭhī; thus, bāṭun, having divided. Thānī and bhātī are often added; thus, banāun-bhātī, having made; jāun-thānī, having gone. Such forms are, however, by no means the only ones, and we often also find conjunctive participles ending in ā, ā-sin, kē, and ī; thus, bātā dilō, having-divided gave, he divided and gave; dēyā-sin, having given; jāy-kē, having gone; manī, having said, therefore. In bhul-kun, having been lost, the suffix kun must be compared with Gōṇḍī kun.

Verbal noun.—The usual form ends in tō, genitive tōr; thus, khātō, to eat; ētō bakhat, at the time of coming; bāj^atōr gajar, the sound of music. Several other forms are also used; thus, mār^anā, to strike; puchhūk, to ask; jāūk, to go; charāū-kē and charāub, in order to tend; nikal, to get out; mār^alē-sē, from (my) killing; mārē-bar taiyār, ready to kill; dēkh-kē, in order to see, etc.

Causals are formed as in Chhattisgarhī and Oṛiyā by adding ā; thus, charāū-kē, in order to tend.

The preceding remarks will have shown that Hal'bi is a mixed dialect. It is by no means a uniform language, but a mechanical mixture of at least three different forms of speech. Through Bhatrī, it gradually merges into Oṛiyā. It agrees with Chhattisgarhī in its phonetical system, in the principle of declension, in its numerals, and to a great extent also in pronouns and in vocabulary. It cannot, however, be classed as a dialect of Chhattisgarhī, chiefly because it uses an l-suffix in order to form its past tense, just as is the case with Marāṭhī and Oṛiyā. With Marāṭhī it shares the ch-suffix of the genitive, the present tense of the verb substantive, the conjunctive participle, and irregular verbal forms such as gēlō, went.

The language of the Halbas is a borrowed form of speech, and there can be little doubt that they have originally spoken some Dravidian dialect. The Halbas of Bhandara now speak Marāṭhī, and in order to avoid splitting Halbī up and dealing with it in more than one place, it has been found convenient to subordinate it under Marāṭhī, though it cannot be considered as a true Marāṭhī dialect. With regard to the dialect of the Halbas of Berar, see below pp. 366 and ff.

Of the three specimens which follow the two first have been forwarded from Bastar, and the third one from Kanker. A List of Standard Words and Phrases will be found below on pp. 395 and ff.

Question.—Did a man called Kōsam Muriyā live in your village ?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Is he alive or is he dead ?

Answer.—He is no more ; he is dead.

Question.—How did he die ?

Answer.—We have killed him.

Question.—Did you kill him alone or together with somebody ?

Answer.—I did not do it alone, but together with my brother.

Question.—What did you kill him with ?

Answer.—A stick.

Question.—What stick did you kill him with ?

Answer.—With that bamboo stick.

Question.—With which stick didst thou strike ?

Answer.—With that long stick.

Question.—And which stick did Bhīmā use ?

Answer.—This one.

Question.—To whom does the small stick belong ?

Answer.—It was in my brother's house.

Question.—Were you carrying it to the spot where you killed him ?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Why did you kill Kōsam ?

Answer.—On account of the expenses for his daughter.

Question.—How is the story of these expenses ?

Answer.—I lived as his son-in-law in his house. Kōsam said, 'nephew, when will you pay the price of your wife ?' I said that I was going to do so, and he again asked when. I said, 'Uncle, I live in your house, you know, and this year I will pay in some way or other.' The uncle said, 'when will you pay ?' and suddenly he rose and kicked me and said, 'I will kill you, you rogue.'

Question.—Was Bhīmā present during this your altercation ?

Answer.—He was not, at that time.

Question.—When did Bhīmā come there ?

Answer.—I went to my brother's house, which is beyond the river, and said, 'well, brother, let us go and ask why he has vexed me and kicked me. He said that he would beat me to death, and I said that I would pay.'

Question.—What did you two do after having gone to Kōsam's house ?

Answer.—First we went to the Mālguzār's house, and my brother said to him, 'let us go and ask him why he has vexed my brother.' The Mālguzār said, 'go you and bring him here, and we will ask him here.' Then we went to Kōsam's house, and I said, 'come, uncle, let us go to the Mālguzār's house. My brother is there.' He then came out and said that he would kill me.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A tiger had once fallen asleep in a forest. Suddenly many mice came out from their holes close to him. At their noise the tiger awoke and put his paw on one of the mice. He got angry and was just going to kill the mouse, when it made the following request, 'Look at yourself and at me. What good will come to you from killing me?' Having heard this the tiger let the mouse off. The mouse then said to him, 'Some day I will make return for this your kindness.' The tiger laughed at this and went into the forest. A few days after the men who lived near the forest spread a net and caught the tiger, because he sometimes killed their cattle. The tiger tried to get out of the net, but could not. So he began at last to roar with pain. The mouse which the tiger had released heard his roar, understood that it was the voice of its benefactor, and found its way to the place where the tiger was caught in the net. With its sharp teeth it cut the net and set the tiger free.

It has already been mentioned that the Mah'rī dialect of Bastar is, in reality, nothing else than Hal'bi. The two specimens which follow share all the characteristic features of that dialect.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Question.—Was there a man called Mātā in your village?

Answer.—Yes, but now he is not there.

Question.—Where has Mātā now gone?

Answer.—He has not gone anywhere. He is dead.

Question.—Did a disease seize him, or has anybody killed him?

Answer.—No disease seized him, but some one killed him, and so he died.

Question.—Who killed him?

Answer.—How should I know.

Question.—The witnesses say that you have killed Mātā. Now, what have you to say?

Answer.—Surely I have not killed him. The witnesses have been told to say so. I have not had any quarrel with Mātā. Why should I kill him?

Question.—This axe was found in your house?

Answer.—Yes; this is my axe, and so it was found in my house.

Question.—There was blood on this axe?

Answer.—Yes. I had killed a goat, and therefore there was blood.

Question.—This cloth was found in your house?

Answer.—The police sergeant threw this dhoti into my house in my presence. I said, 'Master, don't do so. I shall be suspected, and the Government will hang me.' The sergeant said, 'thou hast killed Mātā. All people say so, and therefore I have thrown this cloth into thy house.'

Question.—Had you and Mātā drunk liquor?

Answer.—I drink liquor every day, and I also eat flesh.

Question.—Were you and Mātā on the Pōrā¹ day drinking liquor in Mansā Kalār's liquor-distillery?

Answer.—On the Pōrā day my uncle Guṭṭā stayed with me. I did not go with Mātā to Mansā's distillery. That is all false.

Question.—Have you seen Mātā's corpse?

Answer.—All the village people went to see it. And in the same way I also went to see it.

Question.—Where had Mātā been wounded?

Answer.—There was a wound of an axe on his head, and another on his breast. Only one cloth was on his body, and blood was on it. I do not know anything more than this.

The Halbas of Bhandara speak the usual Marāṭhī of the district, with very few peculiarities.

ṭh is usually substituted for t; thus, dhāk'ṭhā, younger; vāṭhā, share.

Cerebral l is pronounced as r; thus, mir'tē, is got. In dzavad, near, the final d is probably written for r or r.

Note forms such as mī pāp kēlun, I did sin; tyā-na rāsēt dēlan, he gave his property; khāvā-nā, to eat.

In all essentials, however, the so-called Hal'bi of Bhandara closely agrees with the current Marāṭhī of the district, as will be seen from the specimen which follows.

became; he lost was, he is-found.'

Halbas are also found in Berar. At the Census of 1891, 2,841 Halbas were enumerated in the district, and in 1901 their number had increased to 3,124. They are weavers, and most of them are found in Ellichpur.

They have not been reported to speak a separate dialect, and it is probable that at least some of them use the language of their neighbours. A specimen of Hal^abī has, however, been forwarded from Ellichpur, and it shows that some Halbas have a dialect of their own. We are not, however, able to give any figures.

The Hal^abī dialect of Berar is not identical with that illustrated in the preceding pages. It has much less points of analogy with Marāṭhī and more closely agrees with Eastern Hindī. On the other hand, it has some characteristics in which it agrees with Gujarātī Bhīlī.

The pronunciation is mainly the same as in ordinary Hal^abī. Compare, balīs and bōlīs, he said; bal^ahū, I will say; bērā, time. Chh, however, becomes s as in Bhīlī; thus, pusīs, he asked. Note the frequent substitution of ḍ for ḷ; thus, udh^aḍōpanā-na, riotously; kāḍ, famine.

The usual case suffixes are, case of the agent, na; dative, lā; genitive, kō, kā; locative, mā. Thus, bā-na āp^alō kām^adār-lā sāṅgīs, the-father-by his servants-to it-was-said; mānus-lā, to a man; mōrō bāp-kā kiti sāl^adār-lā, to how many servants of my father's; jīn^agī-kō hissā, the share of the property; thōḍā divas-mā, in few days.

It will be seen from the examples that the oblique form is identical with the base, and that the case of the agent is used to denote the subject of the past tense of transitive verbs. The nominative is, however, used instead in lāhānō pōryā bōlīs, the younger son said. Pōryā perhaps contains another suffix of the agent corresponding to ē in Bhīlī.

Pōryā, son, shows that strong masculine bases end in ā. They do not change in the plural; thus, pōryā, sons. There are, on the whole, no traces of any suffix of the plural in the specimen.

Strong adjectives, including the genitive, end in ō, and only occasionally in ā. Thus, lāhānō pōryā, the younger son; but mōṭhā pōryā, the elder son.

The following are the personal pronouns:—

mī , I.	tū , thou.	ō , he (oblique ōn).
mī , by me.	tu-na , by thee.	ō-na , by him.
mō-lā , to me.		ō-lā , to him.
mōrō , my.	tōrō , thy.	ō-kō , his.

Other pronouns are yō, this, dative yē-lā; jē-na, by whom; kāy, what?

The verb substantive agrees with Marāṭhī in the present and with Bhīlī in the past tense. Thus, āhū, I am; āhās, thou art; āhā, he is; past hōtō (and hōtā), plural hōtā.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed from the present participle. Thus, marṭu, I die; bhēṭtē, it is got. The latter form might also be compared with Dravidian forms such as Kanarese māḍ-utle, Gōṇḍī kīātā, it does.

The past tense is formed in various ways. The suffix yō, corresponding to Bhīlī yō, occurs in forms such as tōrī marjī mī tōḍyō (sic) nahī, I did not break thy order; gayō, he went. A suffix s is used in the second and third persons singular; thus, dēyēs, (thou) gavest; āīs, he gave. Such forms take the subject in the case of the agent.

A third suffix nu or na occurs in forms such as rahē-nu, he stayed; dēi-na, he gave. It is probably identical with the n-suffix which is used in Bhīlī and other languages spoken by aboriginal tribes. It is probably of Dravidian origin. Compare the form chhōḍēn-thātī, he released, mentioned above under ordinary Halbi.

A perfect is formed by adding the verb substantive to a form ending in ē, third person īs; thus, mī karē āhū, I have done; tu-na paṅgat dēyē-āhās, by-thee a-feast given-is; ō-na paṅgat karīs-āhā, him-by a-feast made-is.

The future is formed by adding an h-suffix. Thus, bal^hhū, I shall say. In the plural we find kar^hbō, we shall make. Compare Chhattīsgarhī.

The infinitive is formed as in Eastern Hindī; thus charab-lā, in order to tend. There is also a form ending in nō, but it is used as a future participle passive; thus, pōṭ bharⁿnō, the belly should be filled.

Examples of the conjunctive participle are vāt, having divided; chalī, having gone; kar-sarī, having done; dhāy-kunā, having run. Kunā in the last example corresponds to Gōṇḍī kun.

For further details the specimen which follows should be consulted.

BHUNJIĀ.

The Bhunjiā tribe was enumerated in the following districts and states of the Central Provinces in the Census of 1891 :—

Name of District or State.	Number of Bhunjiās.
Hoshangabad	1
Raipur	6,186
Sambalpur	9
Patna	26
Kalahandi	107
TOTAL	6,329

According to Sherring's Hindu Tribes and Castes, iii, 202, they are also found in the Jeypore territory of the Madras Presidency, but they are not mentioned in the Madras Census Report for 1891, in which they have been probably mixed up with the Bhumiās.

They are most numerous in the south-east of the Raipur district, 6,020 having been enumerated in the Raipur tahsil of that district alone.

Hitherto it has been reported that the Bhunjiās have no special language of their own. The utmost that is said about them is that they speak 'a corruption of Hindī. The speech they use among themselves can always be understood, save where Gōṇḍ words occur, which they have learned by mixing up with Gōṇḍ.' A language called Bhunjiā was, however, reported as spoken by 2,000 people in Raipur, in the preliminary lists of language, received for this Survey, and a specimen of it has since been received.

An account of the Bhunjiās will be found on pp. 94 and ff. of the Report of the Ethnological Committee of the Jubbulpore Exhibition of 1866-67, and on p. 190 of Mr. Robertson's Report of the Central Provinces Feudatories Census of 1891. In the latter passage they are identified with the Bhumiās of Jeypore and the country to the east of Raipur. By tradition they come from the eastern Garjat States of Sambalpur. A short vocabulary has been printed in Mr. P. N. Bose's Chhattisgar : Notes on its Tribes, Sects and Castes. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. lix, part I. 1890, pp. 287 and ff.

Bhunjiā is closely related to Hal^bbī. The phonetical system and the inflection of nouns is practically the same. The genitive is apparently always formed by adding the suffix kē; thus, mānush-kē, of a man. The suffix chō is, however, common with pronouns; thus, mā-chō, my; tū-chō, thy. In the dative we also find the suffix lā in addition to the usual Hal^bbī suffixes kē, kō, kā; thus, bābū-lā, to the son.

With regard to pronouns we may note the form tū-chō, thou. The final chō is here probably the emphatic particle, Chhattisgarhī ch, Marathī ts; and different from chō in tū-chō, thy. Compare kāchō, some. Note also hārā, he, usually added to hun; thus, hun-hārā, he. Compare Chhattisgarhī har.

The inflection of verbs is mainly the same as in Hal^bbī. In the verb substantive we may note forms such as āchhē or āyē, I am; tū-chō āchhat, thou art; āchhē and āhē, he is.

With regard to finite verbs we sometimes find n substituted for l in the past tense; thus, kar^anī, I did; bainī and bainit, he became; garāy^anī, he was lost. The final s in uṛāy^alās, he squandered, is probably due to the influence of Chhattisgarhī. The subject of transitive verbs in the past tense is sometimes put in the case of the agent; thus, bāpus-nē dhan dīlō, the father gave his property. But we just as often find instances such as bābū bāṭā nīlā, the son took his share.

In the future we may note forms such as jāidē, I will go ; guthiyābā, I will say. Khāvan, let us eat ; rahan, let us remain, contain a suffix an of the first person plural. Compare Eastern Hindī.

In most essential points, however, the specimen which follows will show that Bhunjiā agrees with Halbi.

Chhattisgarh Feudatories	442
Oriya Feudatories	256
TOTAL	994

Their dialect Nāharī has only been returned from Kanker, where the number of speakers has been estimated for the purposes of this Survey at 482.

Specimens have since been received from Kanker, and they show that Nāharī is closely related to Hal^abī.

The phonetical system is the same as in Hal^abī, and the inflexion of nouns is almost identical. The dative is formed by adding one of the suffixes kē, k, kō, kā, and lā; thus, bāp-kē, to the father; būbā-kā, to the son. In the ablative we find the suffixes sē and bē corresponding to Hal^abī sē and lē; thus, dhan-sē, from the property; dhūr-bē, from far off. In the genitive the ordinary Hal^abī suffixes are used; thus, nāch-kō, of dancing; dēs-kē, of a country. Note also forms such as mānē-chā, of a man; dayā-kar^olō bad^olā, return for compassion. In the plural we find Chhattisgarhī forms such as mitān-sāngē, with my friends.

‘My’ is mō-chō, mā-chō, and mērē; ‘this’ is yē and yō, genitive ih-chō, etc.

The verb substantive is inflected as in Hal^abī; thus, āsē, he is; rah^olō, rah^olē, rah^olā, he was. Peculiar forms are āsat, thou art; rah^obō, he was.

The past tense of finite verbs is formed as in Hal^abī; thus, chāhō, he wished; gailō, he went; ṭār^olē, I transgressed; kar^obē, I did. Note forms such as hāsīdā, he laughed; karindā, I did; ilīs, he came; dilās, he gave, etc.

Instances of the future are jāindē, I will go; sāṅghūndē, I will say; dēh^ochō, I will give. Note also forms such as khād^olū, let us eat; pīlū, let us drink.

The general character of the dialect will be seen from the specimens which follow. They have been received from Kanker.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time a tiger was sleeping in a forest. Then many mice came out from their holes, close to him, and he awoke from the noise they made, and his paw fell on one of the mice. He became angry and was just going to kill the mouse, when it made the following request, 'look at yourself and at me; what greatness will come to you from killing me?' The tiger let the mouse off when he heard this, and the mouse declared that it would some day return his kindness. At which the tiger laughed and went into the forest.

Some days afterwards the men of the neighbourhood of the forest set a net and caught the tiger, who sometimes used to kill their cattle. The tiger tried hard to get out from the net, but could not do so. In his pain he roared loudly. Now the mouse which the tiger had released heard his roaring and recognised it. It sought and found the place where the tiger was lying in the net, cut the net with its sharp teeth and set the tiger free.

KAMĀRĪ OR KĀWĀRĪ.

This is the language of an Aboriginal Tribe called Kamār or Kāwār. It is returned only from the district of Raipur, as spoken by 3,743 souls. According to the Census of 1891, it is also spoken by 146 people in Bastar State, and by 120 in other parts of the Central Provinces, making a total of 4,009.

The number of people of the Kamār tribe in the Central Provinces in 1891 was as follows:—

Name of District or State.
Raipur	5,205
Bilaspur	23
Sambalpur	164
Bastar	169
Kanker	187
Raigarh	13
Bamra	1,302
Rairakhol	13
Sonpur	28
Patna	375
Kalahandi	338
TOTAL	7,817

It will thus be seen that they are found in every Oṛiyā speaking District and State of the Central Provinces, and that they are strongest in Raipur and Bamra. In Raipur they are found principally in the south-east of the district.

Kamārs are a wild tribe living in the most remote jungles, and supporting themselves on jungle-fruits and small game. They are perhaps the same as the 'Kawars' described on page 99 of the report of the Ethnological Committee of the Jubbulpore Exhibition of 1866-67. Whether they are the same as the 'Kanwars' of the Central Provinces Gazetteer, page 413, is more doubtful. They must be distinguished from the Kawars or Kaurs of Chhattisgarh and the Tributary States of Chhota Nagpur.¹

It has been shown that out of the 7,817 Kamārs counted at the Census of 1891, only 4,009 have been returned as speaking the Kamārī language. The rest speak the language of their more civilised neighbours. Kamārī has hitherto been considered to be a Dravidian language, and, as such, it was classed in the Preliminary Rough List of the Languages of Raipur compiled for this Survey. A reference, however, to the specimen now received from that district, and to the following remarks, will show that it certainly belongs to the Aryan Family.

A short list of words in the dialect of the 'Komārs' has been printed by Mr. P. N. Bose, in his Chhattisgar: Notes on its Tribes, Sects and Castes. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. lix, Part i, 1890, pp. 289 and f. It is too short to add anything to the materials contained in the specimen printed below.

Kamārī is a dialect of the same stamp as Hal'bi. It agrees with some Aryan languages in some points, and with others in others. Forms and idioms belonging to Chhattisgarhī, Oṛiyā and Marāṭhī are mechanically mixed together. There is even less of uniformity in Kamārī than in Hal^abī, and the dialect has every appearance of having been adopted at a comparatively recent period. So little has it been assimilated that even the use of the various case-suffixes is vague and uncertain. The form hunā-chē, from the demonstrative pronoun hun, occurs for instance as a genitive, as a dative, and even as a nominative.

The Kamārs are stated to resemble the Gōṇḍis in appearance, and it is very probable that their original dialect was some form of Gōṇḍī. The general character of their present form of speech will be seen from the specimen, and I shall here only draw attention to some of its principal features.

The phonetical system is the same as in Hal^abī, and closely akin to Chhattisgarhī. Compare kāi-jāt, some one; bāṭā, share; āchhē, is.

The inflection of nouns also agrees with Hal^abī in so far as the oblique form does not differ from the base, and there does not exist a proper plural. Thus, dēs-mē, in a country; majur-kō, to the servants.

Instr.	nē .
Dat.	kō .
Abl.	sē .
Gen.	kē, kā, dē .
Loc.	mē .

Thus, abhār-kē ul^atā, against Heaven; nāchā-dē śabad, the sound of dancing; apan-kā gāg^arā, your son.

The personal pronouns usually take the plural form; thus, am, I. They form their genitive by adding chō, chā, or chē; thus, ām-chō kar^ahō, my son; tum-chō sām^anē, before you; tum-chā bhāud, your brother; tum-chē chāk^arī, your service. 'My' is, however, also mōr; thus, mōr bāṭā, my share.

'He' is hun, to which har, ar, and ā are usually added; thus, hun-har, he; hunar-sē, from him; hunā-chē, his. Har is borrowed from Chhattisgarhī.

The verb substantive is formed from the bases hō and āchh; thus, hō, he is; āchhē, thou art, he is, and they are. The form āchhat, he was, is originally the third person plural of the present tense. There are no instances of a real past tense of this verb.

The suffix dē which plays a great rôle in the conjugation of the finite verb in Hal^abī is also frequent in Kamārī. Thus, karūndē, I do; marūndē, I am dying; jāūndē, I will go; bōlūndē, bōlādē, and baldē, he said. Instead of dē we also find dī; thus, dukāl parē-dī, a famine arose; dēv-dī, he gave. It will be seen that such forms are used as a present, a past, and a future. They are all present participles.

The true past tense is sometimes formed by adding iyā, and sometimes by adding lā; thus, chumbiyā, he kissed; miviyō, he was found; jālā and jālō, he became; bāp-nē husē dēkhiyā, dayā kēlā, the father saw him and had compassion. Forms such as tum-chā hukam na tārū, I did not transgress your command; bhītar nahī yā, he did not go in, correspond to the past habitual in Marāṭhī.

Future forms such as khāvā, I will eat; bōlvā, I will say, also occur in Hal^abī.

In the verbal noun and the conjunctive participle we find the same mixture of dialects. Thus, khātō, to eat (Hal^abī); karū, to do (Marāṭhī); charāun, in order to tend (mixture of Chhattisgarhī and Marāṭhī); kayānī, to be called; karā-dē, to do; hākār-kē, having called (Chhattisgarhī); uḥhūn, having arisen (Marāṭhī), and so on.

Causals are apparently formed as in Marāṭhī; thus, nisāvā, cause him to put on; nigāvā, bring out.

Irregular are galā, went (Oṛiyā); malā, died (Oṛiyā); kēlā, did (Marāṭhī), and so on.

The preceding remarks will be sufficient to show the mixed character of the dialect. For further details the student is referred to the specimen which follows.
